AN APPEAL TO BEAUTY. Come, with thy gay and sunny wreath, Fair beauty, in thy primal hour-With Spring's rich fragrance in thy breath, Emblem of its sun-nurtured flower Come-and a transient bliss shall spring From gazing in thine ardent eyes, Where hope and joy their lustre fling, Like sunbeams, through the summer skies.

Come-I will moralize on thee, Gay germ of Being's morning hour-in the free moments of thy glee, Ere Sarrow halls begun its power,-How gloriously within thy breast The throbs of earnest hope arise; There's not a care to check they rest,-There's not a tear to cloud thine eyes.

Come near, thon lovely one and young-It were not wrong to question thee; On whom are thy afflictions flung Brief voyage on a summer sea? Are earthly dreams and phantoms, all That bear thy buoyant spirit up— That twine the radient coronal, And mix the portion of thy cup?

flast thou no brighter vision won Than the ophemeral dream of Earth-No new existence yet begun, Save this of folly and of mirth? And hast thou cast an auxious look Beyond this shadowy 'vale of tears,' Where pains and changes thou must brook, In the chill labyrinth of years?

I hope thou hast—thou seem at too pure For this guilt-tainted, heartless world, where love all perils must endure, And mark cash hope in rain harl'd: Tis a short space—a little day That Earth and all its joys are given-And will thou barter life away, And mire the endless bliss of Heaven!

THANKSGIVING-"Come Charles, my son,"
