TO THE SOUTH.

The time to talk has passed away, Now is the time to do, not say, · And every moment of delay But binds our fetters faster. The wrongs we have so long endured By submission will ne'er be cured, 'Tis fatal in sleep to be lured, 'Twill double each disaster.

Can freemen stand and be oppressed ? And see the enemy divest Their States of power, peace and rest, Without a single murinur ? And shall their words all go for nought ? Then is the South not what I thought, She is a slave-if she is bought-For what else can we term her ?

Every insult let her pocket, Every warning let her mock it, Until like a flying rocket, The truth too late rushes home ; Then alas! is vain th' endeavor These her chains to loose or sever, Then she will be tree-never ! Can you say now "let this come ?"

Will you have your rights denied you? Will you have the North deride you ? As you quaked when she defied you !

Then sit down and fold your arms; But God forbid this case to be ! And may my eyes the South ne'er see, When gone the brave, and lost the free !--- on, over his thin extremities, those delectable | me to be a right smart sort of a chap, that can drabs; and when his toilette was completed, with great pride did he crown the whole with the incomparable blue coat.

Southerners resent your harms! Y. M

'Now, by gracious !' exclaimed Reuben, exultingly, 'my market is just as good as made. If any body wants to get a feller as will be an honor to 'em, all they've got to do is to find out where I board. If they want a smarter or genteeler looking chap than I am, they'll probably have to hunt around in some other district than Neau Orleans. Folks say that situations is as plenty as moskeeters, 'specially for bright, in-telectooal young men like me. I 'spose the trouble will be to make a choice-there's so many chances, that one is sure to get faggled to decide what sort of one to take. Now I ain't a going to be so derned nice about it-if a man offers me a situation in a Bank or Insurance office, at a salary of, say abeout two thousand dollars, or a leetle over, I shall take it, and make no more fuss about it, anyhow. But I should prefer a clerkship in a Life Insurance office, to do their writin' and cipherin' in a leetle taller shape than they ever went anywhere, for I think I should be safer there when the yaller fever comes along. Any way, I'm in the market, and I'm bound to make these Louisiany folks know that if they want real cute, wideawake chaps, Vermont's the place to find 'em.'

The above soliloquy was muttered, at short intervals, by Reuben, during the time occupied in dressing. This operation being finished just as the dinner gong sounded, he descended to the dining hall, and took his seat at the table.

Never having before sat at a dinner in a first class hotel, every thing he saw was a matter of wonder and curiosity to him. The modus operandi of the head waiter and his subordinates -the number of courses and frequent changes -the variety of dishes, and the unpronounceable names given to them, threw him into a state of astonishment, which nearly deprived him of appetite.

After recovering from his bewilderment, he applied himself manfully to the viands presented him, and displayed a vigor in disposing of them that hid fair to amply make up for lost time. His peculiarity of manner attracted the attention of many and the ridiculous nature of his questions and orders, was soon observed by fun-loving wags, who never lost an opportunity of enjoying themselves at others' expense. In Reuben they discovered a rich subject for a 'sawing' operation, and they determined that not many hours should pass away before he became the victim of the largest sort of circular.

Half an hour after dinner found our hero in the bar-room, doing the agreeable with the 'mad ones.' After asking them to take drinks and cigars 'all reound,' he had no hesitation in telling them the object of his visit to New Orleans, and his hope of getting immediate employment; not forgetting to speak of his fear of the yaller fever.

They gravely assured him that, as to the matter of obtaining business, there was not the shadow of a doubt. All he had to do, was to stick for a good price, and leave the employers to draw lots to decide who should have him at any rate. But when they spoke of the yellow fever, they shook their heads, and looked ominous. Strangers, they said, had a mighty poor show, and among Vermonters it had been fata turn my hand to anything. But, how about the price ?' 'Oh, we have a number of prices, according to the circumstances, or tastes of our friends. The questioner now spoke to his man with the staff, and said :- Measure him.'

'Measure me !' exclaimed Reuhen, 'why, darn it all, I don't want any more clothes. Don't you see that this is a bran new coat, that I have got on now ?'

'Yes, but this is to be a different sort of garment-one peculiarly adapted to this climate."

Reuben did not fully comprehend the meaning of this last piece of information, but quietly allowed himself to be 'measured,' which was done by the attendant, holding the staff upright against Reuben's back, and after a moment's pause, saying ; 'Five foot, ten inches high, and broad across the shoulders.'

This statement was noted down by the man with the memorandum, who then looked Reuben calmly in the face, and asked-

'How do you prefer to have it? A common, pine one, or mahogany with a silves plate?' 'Mahogany !- plate !- what ?- gasped poor Reuben.

'Your Coffin, sir.'

'Coffin !---oh Lord !-- almost shrieked Reuben, as he sunk, limp like a wet towel into a chair.

'I beg your pardon, Mr. Doolittle,' said the tormentor-'I fear I have been too abrupt. But in business matters, we should never stand too much on ceremonies. In my capacity as head supervisor of funerals, it is necessary that I should attend to these little matters somewhat in advance, and by so doing, save a great deal of confusion and hurry. Now, at the end of about three weeks, we shall call for you, and -

Reuben heard no more, but made a rush towards the landlord, and frantically begged to know 'what time the next boat left for up-river.' On being informed, he hurried to his room to pack his baggage, muttering to himself as he went-'That I should ever have been such a darned, eternal, everlasting fool, as to come to Ncan Orleans to be measured for a coffin.

Several persons who had been present in the bar-room, during the scene described, were taken to bed in convulsions-and a small boy was busy, with a basket, the next morning, picking up buttons from off the floor.

To My Old Friends in Kershaw.

HAVING paid particular attention to the growth of different kinds of new cotton seed for the last four years, I became so convinced of the superiority of some of them to the gulf cotton, that I bought last fall every seed with which my crop is planted and am fully satisfied that I shall be handsomely paid for so foing. I have the Pront. Bannana, Pomegranate, Harris, and golden chaff. This year I think the golden chaff and Pomegranate, are doing best of a wet year, and on fresh land the Harris cotton will or has made more than any other.

If any of my acquaintances should feel disposed * to try them I will forward any reasonable amount to Charleston, neatly put up in strong sacks at one dollar per bushel and this is what I paid here for all but the golden chaff, for these I paid $5 per bushel. The expense to Charleston cannot he more than one dollar more in other, words, I will deliver any reasonable amount of the seed in Charleston at $2 per bushel. Any one sending an order shall have the seed of the kind ordered. I would remark however, that I have no great many of the golden chaff to spare, as I purpose planting largely of them, this is an early cotton with very extended branches even to the top. The golden chaff seed commanded $5 per bushel here last year.

RERBEN DOOLITTLE'S TRIP TO NEW ORLEANS, Or Measured for a Coffin. WRITTEN FOR THE YANKEE BLADE BY PRES.

It will be recollected by many, that several years ago, the merchants of New Orleans had great difficulty in getting and retaining, for any desired length of time, suit: ble salesmen and book keepers, on account of the unhealthy nature of the climate in general, and the prevalence of the yellow fever in particular. As the most capable clerks were obtained from the northern cities, the merchants held out great inducements, and offered large salaries to tempt young men to leave their homes in New England, and enhance their fortunes by a sojourn at the South.

Among those who 'run wild' with the idea that they could obtain a competency in a few years, in New Orleans, was one Reuben Doolittle, who, after getting his courage up to the sticking point, notwithstanding his great fear of the yellow fever, left his father's farm in Vermont, and set sail from Boston. As our story is located in New Orleans, we will make a long jump, and land at once with our hero in the Crescent City.'

On arriving at New Orleans, Renben took lodgings at a hotel, where, as he had been informed, men of mercantile pursuits were in the habit of meeting, from time to time for the arrangement of business matters with out-of-town tradesmen, and where not a few of them boarded. After being comfortably roomed in the fourth story, his first movements were, to put himself into the 'purtiest' trim his wardrobe and taste would permit. 'The painful operation of shaving, and skinning with cold water, and Peter-Pinder razor, being gone through with, and the after infliction of a soap-suds ablution of the neck and face, completed, (during which last performance, the principle part of the water went running down his back, and the whole of the soap was deposited in his eyes, causing him to revolve in very unique gyrations about the room,) he drew forth the identical drab pants, and swallow-tailed, brass-buttoned, blue coat, which had so excited the wonder and admiration of the village beaux, when he wore them for the first time, the Sunday prior to his departure for the South, and which had caused the tailor, or rather the artiste. who had fashioned them, to be over-whelmed and bewildered with business for the ensuing three months .-With exceeding care and delicacy did he draw in almost every case. The latter part of these remarks frightened

Reuben almost out of his wits, which being observed by the wags, who had long before discovered his bug-bear, they went to work to pile on the horrible as fast as possible. One declared, that never during the annals of New Orleans, had the fever prevailed to such an alarming and fatal extent, as at the then present time; while another very seriously asserted that there was no particular cause for alarm, as only two thousand had been buried the day before. Every one of the initiated had his story to tell, in which he painted the horrors of the fearful malady in the most vivid colors. And every narration was made in such a callous, offhand manner, that Reuben quivered with terror. While matters were at this point, a man entered the bar-room, with a quick, business-like step, and proceeded at once to examine the names in the hotel register. He was accompanied by an attendant, holding in his hand a long wand, or measuring rod. Any one looking sharply at these two men would have recognised them as a couple of the wags, slightly disguised. Having completed his examination of the register, the first comer, turned to the bar-keeper and said :

'I see you have but one arrival from the North to-day-a Mr. Doolittle. Is he here?'

Reuben, on hearing his name spoken, suspected at once that the inquirer was some mer-chant in search of a clerk. He forgot the fears that had beset him but a moment before, and stepping briskly forward, announced himself as Mr. Doolittle.

The following dialogue then ensued between the two; the answers being noted down on a memorandum book, by the stranger.

'Mr. Doolittle, are you a native of the North?' 'Yes, sir. I was born in the purtiest part of Vermont.

'How old are you ?'

'Twenty-six last corn husking.' 'Ever been sick ?'

'No, Sir ; never sick in my life-tough as a knot--hearty as a buck--and can dew more work in a day than you can shake a stick at.'

'Have you ever been in the habit of drinking to excess ?

'Never; I don't think business will ever be put back by my bad habits-cause I 'aint got

Well, sir, I think you are a pretty sure case. Young, healthy, robust fellows like you, who have never been sick, and are rigidly temperate are usually picked off the quickest.'
