

Poetry.

Pray one for Another.

When sin and temptation enchain my way,
From virtue and duty lead me astray;
When life seems a vapor—at longest a span,
And ready to yield to the tempter's ban;
Oh! then, when thy soul from his power would
Be free, 'Tis sweet to remember—they're praying for me.

Fencing.

Mr. Editor:—It is gratifying to perceive that the public mind is gradually becoming aroused on the subject of the present system of enclosures.
Permit me to contribute my mite, however small, to the mass of testimony which has been already adduced in favor of an entire change of the present wasteful and destructive policy of being compelled by law to enclose our corn and cotton fields to prevent the incursions of game and fanning cattle and hogs which prove like spectres about our fences in search of something to prevent starvation.

Messrs. Editors: Having heard that a belted rat would drive all other rats away, I tried the experiment a few weeks since, by procuring a fine sized one and putting a small sash belt on his neck. Since then, his rat subspecies of whom there were a great many before, have all disappeared, leaving to him undisputed monopoly of their former haunts.
