Compulsory Education

E. H. Blake in Spartanburg Herald. A negro school teacher in South Carolina recently said that the white people of South Carolina passed a law in 1895 compelling the negroes to attend school when the constitutional convention required that a negro be able to read and write, or that he hold property before he could vote. He smiled and said that since that time the negro children could not be kept from going to school, and that the negro schools were always crowded, but that now the white people would be forced to pass a compulsory education law to give the white children the education they would need to compete with the negro. That negro teacher's statements is plain enough.

So we have in South Carolina a compulsory law already for the negroes. Here is what Hon. James D. Sullivan, chief of compulsory attendance division of the State of New York, replies from Albany under date of May 28, 1914, as to the effect of the compulsory attendance law in that state and what the people think of it:

"E. H. Blake,
 Greenwood, S. C.

"Dear Sir: Your letter of inquiry under date of May 25 received, and I beg leave to answer your questions in the order submitted.

"1. 'Do you believe education has made greater progress in your state under a compulsory education law than before such a law was passed?'"

"No other single school statute has done so much for the cause of education in this state as the compulsory education law now in operation here. Thousands of children who have been in attendance upon lawful instruction annually since the law went into effect would have been growing up without a chance for education, augmenting the ranks of illiteracy and swelling the ranks of our criminal population, were it not for the compulsory education statute. But very few children in this great state physically and mentally competent are found out of school while the schools are in session.

"2. 'Are the people trying to get it repealed?'"

"They certainly are not. Every single newspaper and magazine in this state is a staunch advocate of a rigid enforcement of this law and all our people in all the various walks of life have come to believe thoroughly in this statute. The compulsory education law has come to stay, and it will yet do for our people what a similar statute has done for the people in Germany during the last 70 years. Illiteracy in the German empire is almost a vanishing point as a result of a vigorous enforcement of attendance laws in that country."

"Every state in the union has now a workable compulsory law except the following: Oklahoma, Texas, Florida, New Mexico, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina."

"In no state where a compulsory education law has been enacted, in my opinion, will it ever be repealed, and in every state having such a law year by year it is being made more mandatory, specific, comprehensive and workable."
