

The war continues, but as winter comes on the fighting slackens somewhat. The armies will probably go into winter quarters before any decisive fighting is done, and there is little hope that peace will be considered this winter.

There is an idea among the people that the best rations must be served on Sunday and that any old thing will do during the week. Just why this is true this writer has never been able to see. During the week the body gets plenty of exercise and the appetite is sharpened for food to restore the worn-out tissues of the body, and eating is a real pleasure as well as a necessity. The cooks think anything will do to eat on Monday or Wednesday or Thursday or any of the week-days, but when Sunday comes there must be twice as much food prepared and it must consist of as many of the good things as can be had. Little exercise is taken on Sunday, the day of rest. The stomach is loaded with the richest of foods and a drowsy feeling follows, accompanied by headaches and other aches. The average human is in worse condition for the proper observance of the holy sabbath on this particular day than any other day of the week. How can a man properly worship his Maker when he is hiding several pounds of rich food for which his body does not call?

We desire to see the day when we get out on one of the six days when we need them most.

Women and children and other non-combatants in Belgium are facing starvation and misery as a result of the cruel war that has been waged within the borders of the plucky little country. Winter is upon them and they are homeless and hungry. Their homes and their crops have been destroyed, and they are thrown out to starve. They are the innocent victims of the cruel policy of the rulers. Poverty and misery has been thrust upon them. They are no more to blame for their condition than you, the reader of these lines.

Americans are responding nobly to the cry for bread, and thousands are being fed with food from America.

Rockefeller is using his millions to aid these sufferers, and the people all over the land are beginning to contribute. A relief committee has been appointed in Columbia, and a committee is being arranged for each county to receive all contributions of money, foodstuffs and clothing, and forward to the proper authorities. By no means has the need been met, and there are thousands of mouths calling to YOU for food and clothing. Any contribution in money may be sent direct to R. W. Holcombe, Columbia, S. C., or brought to this office, but contributions of foodstuffs and clothing should be held and delivered to the county committee when the names are announced.

They Did Some Turning

Mr. Wood and Mr. Stone were walking along Broadway, when suddenly they saw a lady in a sateen gown passing, so naturally Stone turned to Wood, and Wood turned to Stone, and they both turned to rubber.

Morgan's Goat.

Philadelphia Telegraph.

Congressman Frank O. Smith of Maryland, smiled the other evening when the quotation, "Necessity is the mother of invention," was used at a Washington dinner. He said he was reminded of Morgan's goat.

Some time ago a man from the city called on Morgan, who lives in the suburbs, and while sitting on the veranda he noticed some children playing with a goat and wagon on the adjacent lawn.

"Say, Jim," suddenly remarked the visitor, as the team came nearer, "what in the world is the matter with that goat?"

"Nothing is the matter with him," was the easy rejoinder of Morgan. "Why?"

"He looks peculiar," returned the city man, with a puzzled expression. "What is that thing on the front part of his head?"

"Boxin' glove," was the smiling rejoinder of Jim. "I strapped it there to make things a little bit easier for the kids."

Another Coot, Bivens

Wadesboro Ansonian.

Mr. W. Henry Gullidge spent a day in White Store township last week and captured a strange bird, supposed by some of the more credulous to be a German carrier pigeon. Others think it must be a sage hen, a coot or a home raised bird at least. Mr. Gullidge thought it was a duck but found that it could fly very little, having the appearance of a water fowl. It has beautiful red eyes (red by nature) and plumage of a bluish tint. Its feet are peculiarly webbed. Mr. John Lowe, who knows all about such things, says he has caught such birds in swamps, but has never been able to tell by what name it should be called.

(A number of these birds have been captured in this and adjoining counties recently, which indicated that they are becoming numerous in this section.)

The Suffering Horse.

Ohio State Journal

Our hearts go out to him. Next to man he is the greatest victim of the war. He goes in and gets killed, thousands of him, and he doesn't know what for.

It's no affair of his. He doesn't care which wins—Germans, French, English or Russians—it is all alike to him. He gives up his life for one just as soon as for the others. He doesn't hesitate. He rushes up to the blazing cannon just as freely as he scampers across the green fields, not thinking or caring for death. He gives up his life for some country, he doesn't know which.

In artillery or cavalry he plunges to death and becomes a part of the havoc of war without a reason or reward. He belongs to the armament and is on a level with powder, gun, cannon and sword, and yet he is a part of the soldiery when it comes to suffering and cruelty. Never does he experience the old Roman sentiment: "It is sweet to die for one's country." It might be if he had a country. He hasn't—he belongs to all mankind, and this is the way they treat him.

Mule Dived Into Cotton Bale

A team belonging to Esq. E. J. Griffin of Unionville ran away here Saturday and one of the mules dived into a bale of cotton at the platform, somersaulting over it, and lit on his back between two bales, from which position he had to be dragged and set on his feet. The team was driven by a colored man and another one was riding with him. While going down the street towards the platform, one of the lines broke and the mules ran right into the cotton at the platform. One of the men was thrown off and his leg broken. The mules were not hurt and the three bales on the wagon were not thrown off.—Monroe Journal.
