WITH the anniversary of our birth as a nation but a few days off the entire land is in the midst of preparing for its Fourth of July celebration. But there is a marked difference in this and in other years in the form of the ceremonies planned. No longer is the discharge of firecrackers and toy cannon the sole outlet for patriotism afforded the youth. Indeed, except in towns and villages blinded to their own welfare, such a means of celebration is but a relic of the dark ages, for the vast movement for a Safe and Sane Fourth has literally been sweeping the country.

This year, more than ever before, the nation-wide propaganda for a bloodless celebration of Independence Day will bear fruit. Under the direction of the American Civic Association, which has awakened the nation to the necessity of eliminating the red casualty roll of the day, the Fourth of July will no longer be the one day in the year when, through ignorance, weakness or indifference, we sacrifice the bodies of hundreds and thousands of little children.

The propaganda has been wide-spread and the results obtained this Independence Day will be a great impetus to the movement. Last year saw many of the leading cities of the country arrayed under the banner of the safe and sane Fourth. Among them were Washington, D. C., Cleveland, Baltimore, Toledo, Minneapolis, Le Mars, Iowa; St. Petersburg, Florida, and Lafayette, Indiana, in which places the sale and explosion of fireworks of all kinds were prohibited.

This year St. Louis, Albany, N. Y.; Harrisburg, Pa., and La Salle, Ill., have taken their stand against the slaughter of the innocents. In many other places restrictions more or less rigid have been placed on the sale of the deadly firecracker.

That the movement is not merely a hue and cry over a very small matter is the principle reason it has won adherence wherever advocated. Statistics, as a rule, are not eloquent pleaders, despite the fact that they present the cold, unvarnished truth. But when one is reminded that 26 little girls were burned to death at last year's celebration of the Glorious Fourth; that 67 deaths were caused by tetanus; that 19 were killed outright by fire-arms, eleven by explosions of powder, bombs or torpedoes, and six by cannons or similar contrivances, making a total of one hundred and twenty-nine fatalities—when one realizes the day itself assumes a crimson hue indeed.

Nor was this all. The list of injured and maimed for life in all parts of the country totaled the following alarming proportions: Seventy-two cases of tetanus; seven victims who lost both their eyes and thirty-three who will go through the rest of their lives with but one eye; twenty-six unfortunates who lost arms, legs or hands and one hundred and fourteen who sacrificed one or more of their fingers.

In all, including minor injuries in which no permanent damage was done, there were just two thousand nine hundred and twenty-three persons, principally children, who paid the toll to the barbarous custom of celebrating the great day.

The movement for a safe and sane Fourth does not in any way aim to reduce the proper observance of the day or to decrease in any way the pleasure of the participants. It is particularly desired, in fact, that the children shall have greater opportunities for a happy observance of the day than ever before. It aims to bring about a more general participation in pleasurable and truly patriotic celebrations along with a complete elimination of the dangerous elements which still are in many places all too common.

"The youngsters are very reluctant," said Richard B. Watrous, Secretary of the American Civic Association, at the headquarters in Washington, "to forego their customary firecrackers. But every effort is being made to celebrate the Fourth in such an enjoyable manner that it will compensate them for their apparent loss. The association has concentrated during the past year on the pushing through of ordinances in the various states and cities, and has left the preparations of the new and safe forms of celebration to other societies and civic organizations.

"The American Playground Association in New York City, for example, has become greatly interested in the movement and has planned many ways of spending the Fourth without danger. Among the various women's societies fighting for the cause may be mentioned the Daughters of the American Revolution.

You will find on Tuesday that moving pictures will play a large part in the day's festivities, for the American people are extremely partial to them. I wish to emphasize one fact in particular and that is that every effort is being made by those in charge of the celebrations in the various cities to increase the enthusiasm of the youngsters and to make them really enjoy the day."

The moving picture feature of the safe and sane celebration is new this year and is expected to prove most efficacious in spreading the doctrine. In Syracuse, N. Y., the Russell Sage Foundation has exhibited a film one thousand feet long entitled "A Sane Fourth of July." Its chief characters are a mayor, his motherless little daughter, a neighbor and her fatherless small son, a group of dealers in fireworks and the members of a sane Fourth committee.

The young widow is an ardent supporter of the movement against the sale of fireworks in the town. The dealers enlist the aid of the politicians and start a counter movement in favor of an old-fashioned celebration. The storm center is the mayor, whose re-election will be affected by the stand he takes upon the issue. The attitude of the mayor in the city council chamber where the fate of the ordinance is decided and its effect upon himself and the young widow through the lives of their two children constitute the material for the series of intensely dramatic scenes.

The providing of a suitable program to replace the old-fashioned fusillade that began before dawn and ended at midnight has been one of the chief problems of the workers in the cause. From time to time suggestions have been sent out to the various cities and town interested in saving their children from injury and death. "The Patriot," a pamphlet published in the interest of the movement by the Denver Patriotic League, considers a morning parade both entertaining and instructive.

There should be floats representing different periods of our history, such as "The Landing of the Pilgrims," "The First Thanksgiving," a series of thirteen floats, each representing the original colonies, "Martha and George Washington in Colonial Dress," "Betsy Ross Making the Flag," etc. Patriotic songs and speeches for both school children and grown-ups and, when properly conducted, a display of night fireworks under the direction of experts engaged for that purpose by the proper authorities.

The historical patriotic pageant seems to be popular in many parts of the country. A monster parade of them passed last year through the streets of Boston, Mass. In her sister city, Springfield, there were floats with tableaux depicting the "Signers of the Declaration," and other patriotic events. The foreign-born element of the city were intensely interested and exhibited floats appropriate to the customs of their native countries.

The Sane Fourth Association of Chicago pleased the youngsters and the grown-ups last Fourth of July in much the same manner. In return for limiting the size of the firecrackers and strictly forbidding the use of blank cartridges and pistols, elaborate pageants were offered, military tournaments by soldiers of the regular army and a huge public display of fireworks at night that could not fail to delight the childish heart.

Pittsburg also believes in the pageant scheme for diverting the youthful mind from its hitherto dangerous forms of celebration. Heretofore, Pennsylvania has had the blackest record for Fourth of July carnage, it being even greater than that of New York State. In the past, Philadelphia has had to distribute Red Cross hospital tents about the city to care for the victims. Last year, however, she provided a day military parade, a series of children's games in the parks and a pyrotechnic display at night. Two years ago a most elaborate program of tableaux and pageants was offered at Charlottesville, Va., with Pittsfield, Mass., a close second by paying special attention to its children's parade.

San Francisco last year offered three grand celebrations in separate playgrounds with patriotic exercises, gymnastic exhibitions, flag drills, dances and hand concerts as the attraction. The campaign being carried on by the Russell Sage Foundation in its department of hygiene against dangerous celebrations is beginning to have its effect in all parts of the nation. This organization stands for the protection of child life and is one of the most active antagonists of the red casualty roll of Independence Day.

From the firing line this year comes all sorts of encouraging news to those who have the welfare of the movement at heart. Baltimore is planning to select four hundred children and train them to form United States and Maryland flags and to sing national airs. Unless unforeseen circumstances prevent, the suburb of Walbrook will present a burlesque on the "Old Fashioned Fourth," with a parade of children showing the fatal results of celebrating with fireworks.

Milwaukee, Wis., has organized a permanent committee to complete plans for a safe and sane celebration. Little Rock, Ark., will make a special splurge this year on the motion picture films depicting the joys of a safe and sane Fourth. Washington, D. C., as usual, plans a pyrotechnic display at night and patriotic exercises in the morning; last year a floral automobile parade of great beauty attracted much attention.

For several weeks past, the Cleveland, Ohio, Independence Day Association has been engaged in a real live campaign to show the people what a sane Fourth means. A novel feature was the display of appropriate moving pictures in a large tent which was pitched in different sections of the city every few days.

Topeka, Kansas, is to enjoy its first real sane Fourth this year. The plans are in the hands of a committee appointed by the city commissioners; the school board has organized the children for drills and patriotic exercises and several of the clubs have offered a display of fireworks in the evening.

Despite the wonderful progress of the movement, in many places the Fourth of July is still a Day of Carnage with parents sitting calmly by and watching their little children being mangled, tortured and killed. But each year shows an increase in the numbers of cities and towns that enroll themselves under the Safe and Sane Banner. The time is almost at hand, claim the workers in the cause, when the old-fashioned, death-dealing method of rejoicing over the valorous deeds of '76 will be but a horrible memory and in a class with the brutal fanaticism that allowed thousands of children to perish in that tragedy of centuries ago known to history as the Children's Crusade to the Holy Land.

This the third day of summer, and the three have felt like a month.
