Perhaps the most brilliant charge in all militar; history, there is abundant reason why every Amercian should be cor cerned in its facts. Senator Dixon is a North Carolinian by birth, and hi desire was to make it plain that regiments of his native State had tak en a prominent place in the charge.

The histories, he observed, commonly spoks of "Pickett's Virginians." It was true that Pickett's division was composed entirely of Virginia troops, but Pickett commanded only the right wing, and in the assaulting column were also fifteen regiments of North Carolina troops. Such was the point contended for by Senator Dixon. Of the terrible losses suffered in that charge Sena-
