The rains in the last week have been pretty general, but there are some sections that still need moisture.

The man who is prejudiced for or against a cause or person cannot possibly form a right estimate of that cause or person.

A man has successfully gone over Niagara Falls in a barrel. This goes to show what tools some people will make of themselves and to what a lot of other people are eager to see them do it.

It would be wrong to judge ourselves or others by some sporadic thought or action. Our real self is rather to be learned by noting the direction our thoughts and feelings most readily take.

Now is the time when ambitious cities proudly record that they have gained so much per cent in population over the census of last year. They will keep this up until the next federal census comes to puncture the balloon.

It is good to learn of the great wealth in the vaults of the national treasury and of the per capita wealth of the nation. But after all the true wealth is not to be found in gold and silver, but in the character of the people.

The difference between bill-board advertising and newspaper advertising is just this: that with the first you have to go in the advertisement, while in the second the advertisement goes to you, and that makes all the difference in the world with business.

The Spartanburg Herald laments that Spartans must put up with the old-fashioned coffee-mill style of telephone, in the use of which it is necessary to turn a crank. That is exactly what Orangeburg has, and will have as long as we put up with it.

The scientist who says that he can photograph the soul should experiment with the sugar, steel and other trusts. It is always been a question whether corporations have or have not souls and it would be well to have the matter settled in the most approved scientific manner.

Two thousand delegates and visitors to the National Negro Educational Congress at Denver, Col., could not find places to sleep because the hotels and boarding houses refused to entertain them. This shows that the South is not the only place where negroes are refused admittance to hotels and boarding houses kept by white people.

The lynching of the negro at Coatsville, Pa., the other day was one of the most brutal and heartless things that has ever taken place in this country. He was literally burnt alive for murdering a man, yet when a negro is lynched decently and orderly in this section for the most heinous of crimes there goes up a howl from the very section where this burning took place.

Report come from Washington that a number of foreign spies are operating in this country, stealing the secrets of our defenses at important points etc. The Charlotte Observer says they should not make the mistake of overlooking the boys who are speeding the plow and playing ball, measuring calico and keeping rapid-firing machinery in tune. There is the greatest defense this country has.

Whenever any former American society woman who has married into the ranks of European aristocracy gives a party, is presented at court, or wears a new necklace or coronet, the great American dailies eagerly state that she is the daughter of so-and-so of New York, Pittsburg or Chicago. What if she is, the country can bear the strain. But, in truth, does not the constant recital of such news savour of funkynessism?

The New York World says the English House of Lords has imitated the wisdom of Davy Crockett's coon. Since no one on either side wished to see the number of lords doubled, and since the Liberals were certain to take that step if driven to it, the upper House has shown discretion in its surrender. There is no way known to history by which a small privileged class can permanently hold out against a nation resolved.

With a flourish of trumpets the Standard Oil Company announces that it has broken itself up into thirty or more subsidiary companies. That is all very well, but it is safe to say that the one controlling influence under which they all will come will emanate from an office building in New York City, and that the Standard Oil business will go on very much the same as it has in the past. There may be a change of raiment but the body beneath will be the same.

Market Cotton Crop Slowly. Never has a better or more promising opportunity to get full worth of his product confronted the cotton producer than now, says the Atlanta Constitution. It is pointed out in a letter from C. J. Hayden, of Atlanta, writing from Manchester, England, and published today, that the English spinner has been and is still suffering from the scarcity of supply of cotton. He is counting on the season's crop, which he has been told will be the largest ever produced, to recoup his losses. He is organized, has all the money he wants at his command and he is going into the field with the opening of the season to beat down the price of the coming crop and garner it in on the lowest possible basis.

Consensus of opinion among the producers who are best qualified to judge conditions and prospects, is that this season's crop has been overestimated. It was pointed out at the recent meeting of the Georgia State Agricultural Society at Waycross, that the tendency of the season has been to grow more weed than boll and that the fruitage as compared with the stalk, will be quite disappointing. In a communication published today, W. J. Wingate, of Meigs, Ga., states, further that this season's cotton is largely a bottom crop, which will mature early thus fighting the danger of heavy marketing in the fall months with nothing to back it up later in the season.

The too evident effect of flooding the market early in the season would therefore be to bring a much lower price for cotton than sold than it is actually worth based upon the real crop outlook. Then there is the damage to the crop from the cotton caterpillar in the west, which, added to that of the boll weevil is making more serious inroads on the crop than have yet been taken into consideration. Thus, from the standpoint of the season's crop, the producer has an advantage which he can put to good use.

If he goes straight to market with all his cotton in the beginning of the season prices will go smash and the foreign manufacturer will win, as he is right now planning to do. Experience of past seasons has so well demonstrated this that it should be needless to give the producer warning it has happened repeatedly and will happen again, unless there comes what must be almost a revolution in crop marketing methods—a gradual feeding to the market of cotton as the manufacturer and the consumer need it, and are prepared to take it at the price it is actually worth!

The foreign manufacturer wants nothing better than the flooding of the market in the early months of the season; he thrives upon it. It is a bear movement for the unfortunate results of which the producer has only himself to blame. It would be suicidal business policy for the manufacturer or the merchant to put the whole of his product on the market at once; the same policy spells disaster for the producer of cotton or any other agricultural product.

Farmers generally are in better shape than they have ever been; they owe less money, and, with the aid of the banks they can sell their cotton during the season as the price is right and save millions of dollars. This is a plain business proposition; and if the producers will watch the market in an organized way, selling when they can get full value and holding when heavy receipts or bear operations temporarily depress the price, there is no question that they will reap the reward.

Hypocrisy of the World. The Charleston Evening Post shows up the hypocrisy of the New York World and gives us a glimpse of the hollowness of that great newspaper's reform pretenses. The Post said for months the World has been crying out against the great money trust, of which it says, J. Pierpont Morgan is the head. The World has insisted that the money trust is the worst of all trusts, and that it should be broken up by the law or with an axe or in any other old way. The howl the World has been making against the money trust has been something awful.

Governor Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, has been going about the country for quite a spell, ringing the changes and the welkin against the great business combinations and aggregations of wealth and naming the money trust in the same relative position on the list as the angel gave to Abou Ben Adhem's name. Dr. Wilson told his tale distinctly and emphatically over two months ago, when he spoke in Columbia, under the auspices of the South Carolina Press Association. He has been telling it ever since in all parts of the country. And most of the time the New York World has been saying the same thing.

But a few days ago the World learned that Gov. Wilson was saying this thing, and what do you think it did? Hail him as a political prophet, of course, and wish him more power to his voice. Not a bit of it. The World reared back upon its hind legs, pawed the air a piece and screeched out an inquiry as to whether Dr. Wilson was Bryanizing," saying that if he was doing that it feared it would never be able to stand by and for him if he ran for President. And why? Because, said the World, it was a manifest absurdity for anybody to say there was or could be a money trust. It is one of the funniest and most disgusting bits of cant that ever was exhibited in our political show.

The Post says "of course Gov. Wilson is Bryanizing and equally, of course the World is Bryanizing. Col. Roosevelt Bryanized early in the game, and Mr. Taft late. Attorney General Wickersham Bryanizes on tour, though he sticks to the interstices when he is working on his portfolio. Practically all the politicians who hope to get something in the way of recognition and elevation at the hands of the people Bryanize, and occasionally a humbug newspaper does the same thing. Mr. Bryan's cries of 1896 have become fashionable, and most aspirants for national leadership are echoing them. Few of these, however, are Bryanized to the point of really meaning what they say. That has been the secret of Mr. Bryan's failure, continues the Post. He was too literal. What he said he would do people have believed he meant to do, so they wouldn't give him the chance. The trust magnates had no such idea of Col. Roosevelt, so they stood by him and took all of his cussing. The World finds it good business to denounce Mr. Morgan's money trust, but when it comes to a suggestion that this should be busted, it has quite a different feeling. That would take away from New York something of its power to dominate the finances of the country, and nobody in business in New York can stand for such a thing.

Notice. Notice of application for appointment of And. C. Dibble, Judge of Probate for the County of Orangeburg, as Guardian of the estates of Quintilla Henrietta Dantzier, Fred Connor Dantzier, Alice Elizabeth Dantzier and Lewis Marshall Dantzier. Notice is hereby given that the undersigned will make application to the Hon. Robert E. Copes, Judge of the First Circuit, at his Chambers, in the City of Orangeburg, on the sixteenth day of September 1911, at 10 o'clock a. m., or as soon thereafter as petitioner can be heard, for an order appointing Andrew C. Dibble as Guardian of the estates of said Quintilla Henrietta Dantzier, Fred Connor and Lewis Marshall Dantzier, minors, of the ages of twenty, seventeen, fifteen and twelve years, respectively. Each of the said minors has an estate of about two hundred and seventy-five (275) dollars, consisting of cash derived chiefly from the estate of their mother, and an undivided interest in the real estate of their father, deceased, the late Dr. F. W. Dantzier, which real estate is situated in Orangeburg county, in said state, the annual rents and profits whereof do not exceed the sum of one hundred dollars, and an undivided interest in the personal estate of their father, the late Dr. F. W. Dantzier, of the value of about one hundred and fifty dollars. Their father, the late Dr. F. W. Dantzier, was guardian of the estates of said minors, but he is now dead and it becomes necessary to have a guardian for the estates of said minors, and no fit competent or responsible person can be found who is willing to assume the guardianship of the estates of said minors. Aug. 16, 1911. Rosalie Dantzier, 4t. Sister of said minors.
