Bailey is not the only Democrat in the United States Senate that should be retired.

Happiness does not consist in where we are but what we are; in character not condition.

Some people who know the right fail to do it. They seem to think that the mere knowledge is sufficient.

It would improve some people very much if they were as careful of their character as they are of their theology.

It is a good thing to keep one's temper in control, but it is a sad thing to have no temper to keep in control.

One may well doubt the religion of a man who aspires to "mansions in the skies," but is content to let his family live in a hovel upon earth.

The assertion that women who have the ballot do not vote certainly does not apply to New South Wales where nine per cent more women vote than men.

Usually the person most glib in making promises is the most ready to break them. When a promise is made after due thought one may generally depend upon it being kept.

To escape a defeat which he saw coming, Senator Bailey, of Texas, has wisely withdrawn from the senatorial race. The South is no longer a safe place for political traitors like Bailey.

Those newspapers that know that the railroads are trying to control our politics as they claim, should give the facts to the public, including the names of all parties to the scheme.

Judge Meminger certainly takes a strange position in the political frauds in Charleston. By shutting off investigation of the charges of fraud in registering votes he commits a great error in our judgment.

There is a good deal of cheap sentimentalism that sheds tears readily over the sorrows and trial of some imaginary hero in a play or novel, but which does nothing to help those who are bearing the actual sorrows of life.

How inconstant people often are. They expect their friends to have no imperfections yet are full of imperfections themselves. If they love themselves with all their faults they ought to love their friends in like manner.

Threatened governments, like most threatened men, seem to live long. Almost every week the press dispatches tell of impending invasions of Portugal, yet the Portuguese government continues on the even tenor of its way.

Sadness sometimes follows joy. But it is soothing to reflect that sadness also passes even as do the clouds and that just as there is more sunshine than cloud so to the average man does life bring far more joy than sorrow.

The shortening days turn one's thoughts to the long indoor evenings by the firelight. Blessed is that home in which such tactful wisdom and common sense prevails that the children prefer to be at home than to roam the streets of an evening.

That woman who has been granted a monthly household allowance of $2.12 by the Equity Court of the District of Columbia probably does not enjoy life half as much as the average woman whose husband's yearly salary does not equal the above amount.

How true it is that "Like mother, like child." The foot that forms the cradle's motion, the voice that sings the baby lullaby, the heart that responds to the child's every want, the love that teaches the infant prayer are forces which represent a personality shaping the destiny of the child.

If the newspaper editors who claim that the railroads are trying to control our politics are afraid to give the names of the parties engaged in this business to the public will tell the Times and Democrat who they are with the facts to substantiate the charges, it will publish all the facts for the benefit of the public.

A young man has set out to find the ideal woman for a wife. He has pictured in his mind the moral, mental and physical excellencies (mostly physical) his wife must possess. If he keeps true to his ideal he will gain a vast amount of experience in travel and spend any amount of money but his quest will be in vain. After all what right has he to demand the ideal if he is not ideal himself, and that he is not his unreasonable desire conclusively shows.

They Must Reform.

This is a practical age and everything that is must give a satisfactory reason for its existence or suffer the consequences. In truth the age is so iconoclastic that sentiment and antiquity count but little. Take cats as an example. One might naturally suppose that whatever else passed away pussy cats would continue to live on, on a threatened and unscathed. That it has nine lives is in its favor. Then, too, the cat was an object of worship among the ancient Egyptians and that gives it an odor of sanctity.

Cats also have enjoyed popularity, especially with little children and maiden ladies. Cats shows have been numerous and the blue ribbon has adorned the neck of many an aristocratic Matlese, Angora and Persian cat and even the plebeian tabby. But cats have their failings. Many a brush, slipper, shoe and other convenient missile has been hurled at them by irate individuals who have been robbed of their sleep by the nocturnal serenades of amorous Thomases. Which experience makes one sympathize with the poet who says:

Confound the cats! all cats—always—Cats of all colors, black, white, gray; 'Tis right a nuisance and by day—Confound the cats.

True, cats have been of some benefit in catching mice, yet this, perhaps, has been offset by their destruction of birds, including pet canaries. But the Kansas state board of health to bring the strongest indictment against the cat and strike its death knell. All unconsciously it puts them in the same class with jockeys, and verily there is much in common between pussy and Weary Willie. Both shun work as they would the plague. Whoever heard of a tramp or a cat earning a living? Again, their wandering and pilfering habits are notorious. Then, too, neither cats nor tramps contribute to the finances of the community or of the state. The self-respecting citizen pays for himself and pays for his dog, but tramps and cats go free.

But the worse of all is the fact that cats and tramps have an implacable hatred for water. Never has one been known to voluntarily take a bath. And it is in that fact the health of every family and community is menaced. Eight kinds of deadly germs have been found clinging to the whiskers of a cat and its long hairs fairly teem with them. How many are found on the whiskers and unshorn locks of the hobo no one knows but they must be legion. Evidently cats and tramps must be shaved and washed or cease to be.

Doing a Good Work.

The Southern Railway's Road Improvement Train has entered South Carolina and is now making exhibition of its road building in the upper part of the State. This train will be at Orangeburg on Wednesday morning, September 20, and at St. Matthews Wednesday afternoon, September 20. The train is operated by the Southern Railway working in cooperation with the United States office of public roads for the advancement of the improved highway idea throughout the South.

This train is thoroughly equipped for the work it has been sent out to do. It carries exhibits, illustrations in the form of stereopticon views, samples of road building material and many other features that will be of interest and value to those interested in the improvement of the roads of their section. There are also on this train government experts on road building who deliver lectures on the subject at all points where the train is greeted by crowds interested in its mission.

The Southern Railway, which operates this train over its lines without cost to any one except itself, is doing it to aid in the building of good roads because it wishes to see the territory it serves grow and develop and produce more business. This is a common cause. We are all interested in the South's development and we have come to know that the most certain way in which to promote the growth of the South is in the extension and improvement of its highways. This is a public service for which the Southern should be commended.

No counties in the State need good roads any more than the counties in this section, and the people living in them should give the Southern Railway's "Road Improvement Train" a warm and hearty welcome when it visits their section, and show an interest in its visit that will reflect the interest they feel in the cause of better roads. The Southern is doing a good work in this and deserves the encouragement of the people. We hope the train will be greeted by a large crowd when it comes to Orangeburg on the 20th instant.

Wilson Could Be Elected.

The conclusion of the Springfield Republican after a careful review of the national political situation, is that Woodrow Wilson could today carry the United States by a safe majority in the electoral college without the aid of New York or Connecticut. The Birmingham News says this is a remarkable statement, but it indicates clearly the drift of sentiment toward the New Jersey governor and emphasizes the fact that he is today the most formidable figure in the Democratic party. That he will grow rather than diminish is absolutely certain. The more the country sees of Wilson and hears from Wilson the firmer his grip upon the public thought and the public conscience. He has grown in the estimation of the people from day to day, ever since he worsted the political ringsters of New Jersey in a battle for the freedom of that people from machine rule. He has displayed all of the traits that command the admiration, the respect and the confidence of the people. Courage, resourcefulness and fidelity to principle have characterized his conduct from the first, and he has proven himself an orator and logician of extraordinary ability. For these reasons, the conclusion of the Springfield paper that his nomination "would be the most formidable the Democrats had made since 1892," is well founded.

In Memoriam.

Today one year ago, the death angel visited our home and bore through pearly gates into the presence of God the precious spirit of our darling brother, Manny J. Blackmon. Dear brother, without thy presence the world seems sad and cheerless. We miss thee everywhere; we miss thy loving care and guidance; but we have the sweet consolation that thou art home with Jesus.—Home, Sweet Home, where no temptation assails, and no sorrow disturbs thy sweet repose.

Dear brother, if we are faithful, we will soon be reunited in that known and tears are never shed. We miss thy kind and willing hand, thy fond and earnest care. Our home is dark without thee—we miss thee everywhere. Thou thy darling form lies sleeping, In the cold and silent tomb, Thou shalt have a glorious waking, When the blessed Lord doth come. Sister, Orangeburg, S. C. Sept. 5, 1911.
