It is never wise to expect too much as we go on in life. Neither is it wise to hope too little.

Some people manage to obscure when they profess to enlighten. This seems to be especially true of some politicians.

Some business men hide their business light under a bushel, as they never advertise, and then wonder why it is that some people pass by their stores to trade elsewhere where the light shines.

What the world detests is sham. A hollow, artificial politeness and profession may deceive for a time but ultimately the sham is exposed and the one guilty party of it is covered with contempt.

It looks as if President Taft will have to fight hard for re-nomination and then fight harder for reelection. He is being opposed by the Insurgent Republicans, who are boosting Senator La Follette.

Some people at first sight seem so full of wisdom and capacity that great things are expected of them. When they fail to make good it is found that with them everything was upon the surface like thin veneer.

Strange as it may seem some wicked people would not be so dangerous if they did not have some good qualities. Those qualities are the bait which oftentimes catch susceptible people to their ultimate injury.

The life of a nation cannot be kept sweet and clean by political machinery alone. There must be strong, pure and unselfish manhood and womanhood or the machinery will be controlled by the grafter and selfish interests.

All the high-flown talk about "souj mates" and the pursuit of the "ideal" indulged in by a certain class of people is only a form of saying that they do not believe in observing the common and wholesome decencies of life.

When people steal poultry they go to prison if caught and convicted. Therefore in the fitness of things it was but right that the convicted members of the poultry trust who virtually stole from the people should meet with the same punishment.

Many fail in life because they lack the faculty of concentration. Instead of focussing time and energy upon the completion of one task they start so many that they have not time to give due attention to the claims and needs of each.

So strong is the personality of some public men that no matter how many mistakes they make they retain their popularity. While other men less endowed with personal magnetism never secure popularity however great their virtues and however few their mistakes in public life.

If the Insurgent Republicans mean what they say, it will be impossible for President Taft to be re-elected if he is re-nominated. The Insurgents are saying some very hard things about the President and his standpat supporters. It remains to be seen what they will do when LaFollette is defeated in the Republican national convention by President Taft.

The Branchville Journal says work was begun last week on the new public road from the old Rhoads place to connect with the Rowesville road near the Cattle Creek camp ground. The citizens of the sections traversed by the new road are doing the preliminary work and they expect the county chain gang to perfect the road and keep it in good condition.

A cablegram from Peking, China, says missionaries in the outlying districts of Sze-Chuen province have been ordered to concentrate in the larger towns, in consequence of the general unrest among the natives, arising from the government's railroad policy. The agitation against the railroad projects of the government is directed chiefly against the construction of the Sze-Chuen-Hankow railroad which is to be built with foreign capital.

Judge Mamminger's plea that he did not know what effect his injunction would have on the Charleston election when he issued it, and his admission that his order restraining the Democratic Executive Committee from purging the rolls of fraudulent registered voters was a mistake, shows him in a sorry light, and will lose him many votes in his race for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. Legislators will naturally ask themselves is a man who make such blunders, competent for such a high office?

America and the Fine Arts.

The death of Edwin Abbey, the celebrated painter, reminds us of the great advance America has made in literature and the fine arts since Sidney Smith sneeringly asked, "Who reads an American book?" As a matter of fact there never was any justification for the sneer for even in America's earliest years authors and artists of fame were not wanting. In the particular sphere in which Abbey gained such distinction names, among others, of Benjamin West and John Trumbull easily suggest themselves. But naturally as the nation grew away from the comparative primitive and rough pioneer days to a position of wealth and refinement the way for men of genius in the arts became more open, and many found it to their own profit and honor of their country. Among all such Abbey easily rose to first rank. This was not due to luck, but to painstaking and hard work and a rare artistic gift.

His mural paintings, (The Holy Grail) for the Boston public library are among the masterpieces of American painting and at once secured for him a national fame. Perhaps the best tribute to Abbey's talent was the commission given him to paint the oration of Edward VII of England. His success and that of others in painting and sculpture proves that this country can hold its own with other nations and that it is not altogether ruled by the spirit of commercialism.

Brutal and Cruel.

We think the Mexicans and Spaniards cruel and brutal when they permit and witness bull fights. But we do not condemn ourselves for permitting auto speed contest in which people are filled and maimed. This kind of sport is just as brutal and cruel as bull fights, and they should be stopped. Almost invariably when such contests take place there are one or more fatalities and it is a wonder there are not more. Such exhibitions are not sport in the true sense of the term, but are nothing but crude, meaningless contests contrived to develop and satisfy the craze for sensationalism. They have also a morally debasing influence upon many spectators. It is well known that many are attracted to such races in the hope that some great accident may happen, and that they are disappointed when no one is killed or badly injured. The callous indifference wrought by such exhibitions was strikingly seen in the recent meet in Elgin, Ill., when many of the crowd clamored for the races to go on even when they new that two men had been killed. In face of such facts, as these, where is there any room for us to hold up our hands in holy horror at the depravity of the Spaniards and Mexicans for allowing bull fights.

Always Be Polite.

It costs nothing to be polite, and nothing pays one better returns. The street car conductor who said it was just as easy to be polite to passengers as impolite, and a good deal better, was a wise man. And the fact that the company has awarded him two gold medals for being the most obliging conductor on their line showed that they realized that such conduct was good in itself and that it helped to swell the dividends. Doubtless that conductor like most conductors and other officials, had his temper sorely tried at times, for some passengers have an inveterate habit of asking foolish questions and in other ways making themselves a nuisance. Nevertheless the golden rule holds good in deportment as well as in other things. If we are officials it is well to remember that we should do and say to others what we would do and have them say to us. And if we are not officials and have dealings with them the same rule applies. Remembering this a greater consideration and courtesy will be shown all round. Remember it pays to be polite whether you get gold medals or not.

Getting to be Dangerous.

It is getting to be a real dangerous thing in Orangeburg County for even a white man to kill another man. The conviction of ones and Chestnut for killing men amply proves this. The juries that did their duty in these two cases are to be commended for putting a higher value upon the lives of their fellowmen. It is hoped the worthy example they have set will be followed by these juries. If it is, killings in Orangeburg County will be few and far between. Let men understand that sure punishment awaits them for taking the life of their fellowmen and killings will cease. These juries have given notice that they must cease in Orangeburg County, or those who commit them must take the consequences. We hope the commendable action of our juries will spread to other counties until it will be dangerous to kill a man anywhere in South Carolina.

Should Get Together

Not unlikely the unfortunately large number of religious denominations would be decreased and the cause of church union advanced if a question were put to the rank and file in each denomination to settle. As a matter of fact the line of separation between many bodies, especially those of the same denominational family, is so thin that to the ordinary layman it is a wonder that it is not at once obliterated. Probably the greatest barriers to union are the denominational secretaries and other principal officials who fear that union would decrease their number, as it would, and so cost them their position. But it is the larger good in the shape of consolidated forces, economy of money and men, and greater efficiency that should be considered.

He who tries but has no faith in his effort will soon cease from trying.
