RAILWAY COMMISSION MAKES ITS REPORT.

Columbia, Oct. 27.—The railroad commission today gave out its report on the inspection of the Southern's roads between Columbia and Greenville and between Columbia and Spartanburg, about which there has been so much complaint during the last year or two.

The public has complained that the Southern failed to make schedules on these lines and that this failure was partly due to the bad condition of the roadbed.

The commission reports that they did not find the road in bad condition as had been expected and that Superintendent Williams had already begun work on the repairing of the bad places. Fourteen miles between Alston and Greenville has been recently laid with new 60-pound rail; and the rest will soon be laid with 60-pound rail.

Since May there has been 26,500 cross-ties placed on the Columbia and Greenville road and there are 1,400 more ready to be placed. On account of the trains the company has been unable to do much work along the Saluda river between Newberry and Ninety Six.

On the Spartanburg and Columbia line, new 70-pound rail has been laid for over 19 miles and rail for two miles will be placed in the next two weeks. Within the next 30 days the same weight rail will be laid south from Spartanburg and 24,300 cross-ties will be placed.

The depots at the small stations are found in a very good condition the exceptions being at Chappells, Belton, Ninety-Six and Jonesville.

A WIRELESS EXPERT AT 13.

New Haven Boy who Rigged Up His Own Apparatus.

New York Sun.

New Haven, October 20.—Malcolm Doolittle, aged 13, of 147 Bradley street, has unaided studied the science of wireless telegraphy, has built a wireless station in the backyard of his home and is able to pick up messages from passing steamers in the Sound five miles away.

A few months ago he read in a children's paper a description of a wireless outfit and explanations as to how a bright boy could rig up an outfit that would send messages across the room. He told his father that night that he was going to try the trick, and his father laughingly told him to go ahead, and that he would give him $1 for every message that he could send across the room.

The youngster worked at the problem every spare moment out of school, and one evening surprised his father by telling him that he was ready for that first payment on the dollar plan, as he could send a message across the room. The father inspected the outfit that had been rigged up and was convinced only after his son had sent him messages across the 20 foot room.

Then young Doolittle began to plan to send messages all over the house and to interest the other boys in his neighborhood in the fun. Soon that part of town had various wireless stations rigged up temporarily in drawing rooms, kitchens and laundries. The men, but Doolittle kept on.

When the novelty of the house equipment wore off young Doolittle tackled the bigger problem of transmitting and receiving messages outside, and wires were strung up on the outside of the house. It was many weeks before the lad could figure it all out, but finally he struck it and then began asking plans for a tower in the back yard and a real wireless outfit.

A tower 75 feet high has now been equipped at a cost of $100, and from it Doolittle can establish communication up to 100 miles. When the young inventor got this rigged up to suit him he began trying to catch the messages that were being flashed to the De Forest tower station in the western part of the city, three or more miles away from his home.

The operators sending and receiving messages at this station were speedy, and at first the novice had difficulty in getting them. Finally he learned the secret and could pick up a message whenever it came into that station.

Next young Doolittle began to pick up messages from passing boats in Long Island Sound. After some experiment he found that this was mighty interesting. During the last month or two, since the wireless station was removed from here, all his practice on his new apparatus has been confined to talking with passing vessels.

But he's not content with his present equipment, and just now is engaged in a new attuner, which when it is finished, will be the first of its kind ever built and, he thinks, will outclass anything that has yet been devised.

Charleston Gala Week.

One of the chief attractions during Charleston's Greater Gala Week will be the poultry show which will be given under the auspices of the Charleston Poultry Association, from November 5 to 10, from present indications the show will be larger than it was last year. Mr. T. J. McCarty, the secretary of the Association, says the show this year will in every particular surpass the show of 1905. The arrangements of the exhibits will be different in that the pens will occupy a certain space, and the single birds another, which will be much more convenient for both the judges and the visitors.

The show will be held in a large hall on King Street. Exhibits will be received from all parts of the State as well as from other States and there will be keen competition for the various prizes.

There will be cash prizes offered this year. The Charleston Poultry Association will donate a number of Silver cups, which will be very handsome.

The judges will be Mr. George O. Brown, of Maryland, and Mr. F. J. Marshall, of Atlanta. Both are competent judges and will give entire satisfaction to those who will send birds to the show. Mr. Marshall was one of the judges at the show last year. He judged at such large shows as Columbus, Toledo, Cincinnati and Dayton, Ohio; Indianapolis, Ind., and Battle Creek, Mich. Last year he was selected for the great St. Louis show. Mr. Brown has also had an amount of experience in fancy poultry.

How He Knew.

There is a very forgetful girl in Denver, living up on Washington street. Fearing a young man who called on her last week would stay too long she set the clock in the parlor half an hour ahead. She was tired, having been out horseback riding that day, and wanted to get to bed early. The scheme worked. But then she forgot to turn the clock back and having numerous young men friends, she also very carelessly forgot which one it was. Last night the young man called again. The clock was still fast and he noticed it.

"That clock is wrong, isn't it?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied. "I set it ahead so a fellow who called Wednesday night would go home in time to let me get some sleep."

"The clock fooled him all right," said the caller quietly.

"How do you know?" she asked. The young man smiled a sickly smile. "I called Wednesday night."

The girl coughed. "We're having so much trouble in getting a hired girl," she said. "Does your mother ever have difficulty securing good help?"—Denver Post.

Vanderbilt on Divorce.

"I have no use for a man who does not love his family," is the expression used by Alfred Vanderbilt in discussing the domestic troubles of wealthy families with friends at the horse show, Norfolk, Va.

"I do not believe everything I see in the papers about wealthy families being at loggerheads and about to sue for divorce. I know a lot of these stories are untrue. When a wealthy man has a little spat with his wife, the newspapers give the facts. If the same things occurred in a poor man's family there would be nothing said about it.

"The wealthy man has his quarrels with his wife the same as the poor man, but they kiss and make up. The newspapers never mention the fact that a poor man quarrels with his family.

"A wealthy man loves his home, his wife, his children, the same as a poor man. There is no difference. It is nature. Stories to the contrary are lies."

The discussion that led up to these expressions of Mr. Vanderbilt was on the reported estrangement of Howard Gould and his wife, between whom a reconciliation recently was effected.

It's difficult to convince a man that his money isn't on a sure thing until after the race.
