NO. 46.

THE WRONG MAN. Working the Confidence Game on an Old New York Soldier.

James Chittenden is a well-to-do farmer of western New York, who fought under Gen. Grant, and who came to the city to pay the last sad tribute to the memory of his old commander. Time has whitened the long hair which streams over his coat-collar, and long bending at the plow has imparted a stoop to his broad shoulders; but his face is ruddy with health, and his step as firm and springy as ever, while his arm is as strong and his glance as bright as when he first shouldered a musket Many eyes were turned upon him as he sauntered sadly down Broadway on his way to the city hall yesterday afternoon in his travel-stained linen duster, heedless of the elamor of the passing crowds and the din of car-bells and carriage-wheels. A sorrowful expression clouded the benevolent countenance of the veteran, and he was walking along slowly near Canal street, saddened by thoughts of days that were gone, when he was astonished by a cordial salutation from a slim, dudish youth, who suddenly smiled up at him and waved at him an ambrosial hand glittering with rings: "Why, bless my soul, Mr. Smith," exclaimed this product of latter-day civilization in the most honeyed tones, who ever would have thought of secing you? This is : .eed an unexpected pleasure."

Mr. Chittenden for a moment was taken aback. He surveyed the newcomer from the crown of his white tile to the points of his dainty patent-leather shoes and saw at once that he was an entire stranger; but he loves a joke, and a twinkle showed in his clear gray eye as he replied with a quiet

"My name is not Smith; it's Brown.

The dudish young man bowed his nest onable bow and at once passmost ' ed on, with profuse apologies for his mistake, and Mr. Chittenden again pursued his way. He had stopped laughing at his little adventure and had relapsed into his former train of meditation when he was a second time accosted by another apparition in a standing collar and cuffs, and a voice even more unctuous than the first, saluted him as "Mr. Brown." Whether Mr. Chittenden's faith in human nature had been shaken by his first encounter, or whether his love of a joke again impelled him, he does not now remember, but he immediately seized the hand extended to him and shook it with cordial violence, uttering at the same time the warmest greetings.

"How do you find yourself, my dear-est friend? There, stand off so I can look at you," cried the exuberant farmer, emphasizing every word by tightening his grasp of the stranger's hand. "Pleased to see me? The pleasure is mine, sir; entirely mine. Only to think of it's being you! What, come to see the funeral? How considerate of you, eh?" -and all that sort of

"Oh, yes, and-and all that sort of thing," replied the other, his smile a little fainter and his tone a little less cordial than at first "Why, what an affectionate fellow you are, Mr.

"Aye, lad; cordiality runs in our family," rejoined the farmer, closing his fingers relentlessly and working his arm like the handle of a forcepump; "a firm hand shows a warm heart Affectionate? Well, I reckon I am. None of your loose grips for me. Meet a friend as a friend, I say, and don't be backward in showing your friendship. Why, how well you look. I should never have known you."
"Time does alter one, it's true.

There, there, Mr. Brown; I have been suffering with a sore hand, if you would

"Don't mention it, sonny; don't mention it Nothing like exercise to keep good blood circulating. I can never control myself at the sight of an old friend. Well, well, only to think that it's you. How-how-you've growed?' "Yes, indeed, and that reminds me

-I've an important engagement, and I see I have no time to lose, so if you'll just excuse me-

But Mr. Chittenden is not the man to part from old friends so hastily, and so he only jerked the arm of his new acquaintance the harder, renewing his expressions of delight. By this time the thing was getting serious. The would-be confidence man was capering with pain, and struggled in the vicelike grasp of the stalwart rustie like a lobster in the clutches of an octopus. His face and lips were colorless, and his brow streamed with cold perspiration. His eyes stood out like saucers. His collar broke leose, his hat fell off, and the light seemed to have faded out of his life. The agony depicted on his face was not lessened when he saw that a crowd was gathering; and the farmer released him only after a final wrench which nearly tore the wily sharper's arm from its socket.

"What, going already?" exclaimed Mr. Chittenden, who had never turned a hair and rather enjoyed the exercise. "Well, well, you needn't be in such a hurry," he continued, in a reproachful tone, as the confidence man picked himself up and darted around the corner out of sight of the approaching figure in the helmet and brass buttons. "That's rather shabby treatment of an old friend like me-but he didn't seem so very glad to see me, after all," and Mr. Chittenden beamed benignly upon the grinning bystanders and calmly pursued his journey.—New York World.

Miss Belva Lockwood is not quite so ridiculous as eampaign caricatures made her. She might be 40, or she might be 50. Her features are of the clear-cut Grecian, refined type; aquiline nose, straight forchead, overhanging a pair of sharp, penetrating eyes, a glance into which at once convinces one that the lady is endowed with more than ordinary brain power. Mantled over her forehead is a roll of handsome, wavy gray hair that adds much to her natural beauty of her face. There is nothing in her outward appearance or expression that would lead a casual observer to guess that she belonged to that much-rid culed class of women denominated "strong-minded."

A Domestic Tragedy.

Last summer while the writer was in Amelia County, Virginia, the following incident occurred, illustrative of the philosophical manner in which negroes accept the decrees of Providence. Amelia, it will be remembered, is one of the black counties. The negroes occupy most of the old homesteads, and are given over to ignorance and supersti-tion. The Wigwam, the old Harrison place, a house well known in Virginia, is surrounded on every side by hordes of negroes, who own small tracts of land, and farm them. One of these settlements is at "the Ladge," once the property of Mr. Robert Archer, a distinguished Virginian gentleman of the old regime, now, with all his descendants, dead and gone. My hostess and I was peeling peaches on the broad veranda, when Mary Cæsar, the dairy-maid, appeared. "Miss Anna, gimme plece o' light bread, please, marin."

"Who is sick, Mary?' said Mrs. Hlight bread being a luxury reserved for trim your nails every Friday you will the ill negroes.

"Sister Rose Archer, marm." All colored people claim the fraternal relation, whether there is any in reality or not, if they are members of the same church, or have "experienced a change." "Why, I thought Rose Archer lived in Richmond. What is the matter with Well, Miss Anna, she done all she could, en gin him er funeral, en den, bein' ez she was a widder, en pore, she come up to de Lodge to stay here 'longer Willum's daddy en mammy. Unk Crutch Henry were mighty flieted 'bouten Willum being kilt, 'cause he were do onliest son whar he had, but Sis Rose say she gwine dar to be all de company she ken for Willum's folks.'

The peach knife fell. Mrs. Hthough schooled to Amelia eccentricities, stood transfixed. Then she gasp-

"And William's father and mother let her stay there after killing their only son?"

triumphant excitement in her eyes, though her manner was as gentle and deprecatory as ever. "Sis Rose Archer dead, Miss Anna,"

"Dead! When did she die?" Mary smoothed her apron.

"Well, Tuesday mornin', Miss Anna, Br'er Jeames Barksdale went to Court-House, en de sheriff sont Sis Rose word to git ready, 'cause he was comin' to de Lodge Monday mornin' to git her en hang her for killin' of Willum Archer. A New Hotel Dodge.

"Key to 278!" said the bell-boy to the clerk of a city hotel, as he rushed up to the counter.

The clerk took the key out of the box and extended it to the boy, when a thought struck him, and he stopped and looked in the box at the address on an envelope lying there.
"Who wants it?" he inquired.

"Lady in parlor-in a hurry," replied Front, dancing a jig of impatience. "That ain't her room. Go back and ask for her name."

Front disappeared and returned presently, slowly.
"She says it don't make any difference-it's a mistake-and she's gone." "Thought so!" ejaculated the clerk to a reporter standing by. "She was working the new racket. It's a pretty good one, and sometimes takes; operated by women generally. They go into the lacies' parior, ring for the bell-boy, and send him in a matter-of-fact way for the key of some room. He asks the clerk for it, and, if he is busy and thinking of something else, he hands it out without a question. Then the female sharper goes through the room in a hurry, trusting to thieves' luck that the occupant will not return before she gets away. Then the hotel is responsible for the loss. -St. Louis

The largest hotel in Santiago, Chili, recently built, has its oddity, like other things in that country. The oddity is, says a correspondent of the Sun, the bar in the case where ladies are expected to lunch. "It is," he adds, "the only hotel bar in South America, and the proprietor of the hotel, who wanted to introduce all the modern improvements, was rather bewildered in selecting the location of this one. But it is a beautiful bar, and the ladies admire it as much as the men. At first they were disposed to walk up to it and say 'The same for me, if you please,' with their brothers or husbands, but have been convinced that the proper form is to sit at the tables and take today, but afterwards released. their drinks there. To see a lady drinking a cocktail in the bar-room of the Grand Central of Santiago may startle the prohibitionist who comes here, but
