

THE UNCONQUERABLE ARMY DEFEATS TYPHOID

Prior to 1910, when the use of anti-typhoid vaccine was first begun in the Army, from 20 to 100 soldiers in every 10,000 suffered attacks of typhoid every year. By 1912, when protective vaccination had come into general use throughout the Army, the typhoid rate had been reduced to three in every 10,000, whereas in 1915 only 8 of every 100,000 soldiers had typhoid. This is the measure of the progress which the U. S. Army has made against one of its former most terrible scourges. Its medical advisers have availed themselves of and put into effect the best of modern practice relating to environmental sanitation and personal hygiene, and the organization of the Army is such that it has been possible to take advantage of the very great degree of protection afforded by the use of anti-typhoid vaccine as a preventive measure.

Read this topic of medical progress as related by Surgeon-General Ireland of the U. S. Army.

The World War demonstrated, on the most vast scale possible, the very great value of prophylactic typhoid vaccine as a preventative measure. During the Spanish-American War about 20,000 soldiers suffered attacks of typhoid and about 2000 died of it, whereas during the World War there were only about 2000 cases with approximately 200 deaths. These gross figures, striking though they be, fall far short of representing the actual results obtained in the prevention of typhoid. The number of men mobilized for the Spanish-American War was only about 25,000, while during the World War approximately 4,000,000 men were called to active service. Considered, therefore, in the light of the actual strength of the American armies engaged in the two wars, it can be stated that for every one case of typhoid occurring during the World War 150 occurred during the Spanish-American War.

Our armies fared much better in this respect than did the armies of our Allies. The mobilization of the French and British armies was of necessity a very hurried one and the existing emergency prevented the widespread use of this prophylactic measure. In the French armies, for example, 45,000 cases of typhoid and paratyphoid occurred during the first six months of hostilities. Not until about the end of the second year of the war was it possible for the French to very completely apply this prophylactic measure. The value of its use is evidenced by the fact that during the first two years of the war, when vaccine was administered only to limited numbers of men, approximately 100,000 French soldiers had typhoid and paratyphoid fevers, whereas during the last two years, when it was possible to apply this measure generally, only about 2000 cases occurred. The armies of our Allies had a somewhat similar experience, except that the British succeeded in initiating this prophylactic measure through every part of their forces within a few months of the outbreak of the war, with the result that this group of diseases was immediately brought under control.

Today cases of typhoid fever are looked upon as medical curiosities in Army hospitals. During 1925, with an average strength of 135,000 men, only 4 cases of typhoid occurred in the Army. One of these had recently been enlisted and was not protected by vaccination. The diagnosis was confirmed by recovery of the typhoid organism from the blood. The remaining three had been vaccinated previously. The diagnosis in these cases was based on clinical symptoms and could not be confirmed by laboratory examinations, though such examinations were made. All patients recovered.

NEW INVENTIONS

One of the most recent aids to the motorist is a rubber cap of specially tinted rubber to be slipped over the headlights when driving through fog. The covering has the effect of diffusing the beam and the orange glow through the shield helps the vision.

Motorists who persist in using brilliant headlights are "given a taste of their own medicine" from a set of mirrors on the windshield of an approaching car. The glasses reflect the glow back into the eyes of the offending driver as an emphatic hint to dim his lights. The mirrors are clamped to the lower half of the shield and are so arranged that they catch practically all of the light and send it back as a single reflection.

An electric fire-alarm system, patented by a Canadian inventor, consists chiefly of a fuse box in which cocoa butter melts at ninety-four degrees Fahrenheit, completing a circuit to ring a gong. The apparatus may be connected to a private bell in the building or to a fire station for unoccupied houses.

Flexible lighting cord for a floor lamp now on the market is attached to a winding drum in the base of the lamp so that it is reeled in automatically when the stand is moved back toward the wall plug and unwinds as needed. This arrangement is intended to prolong the life of the cord and prevent tripping over it.

That Stomach of Yours!

Knoxville, Tenn.—"I had a nervous breakdown and my stomach got so weak and out of fix that my food just would not digest, it would sour and come up, causing great distress. I got so very weak and rundown that I had no strength left—could not do my housework. Nothing seemed to touch my trouble until I began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It strengthened my nerves, built me up and so overcame the stomach trouble that I have had no more discomfort with it since."
