

Annual Meeting
Good Samaritans

The Annual Meeting of the Clinton Caravan of Good Samaritans will be held next Sunday, February 10th, at 3 p. m. in the Ladies' Club room at the Masonic Temple. It is hoped and urged that all members will be there to hear reports of the year's work, elect officers for the coming year and transact any other business that may be required.

It is also desired that all others come who are interested in helping the indigent in and around Clinton. This organization is too small and its income consequently too meager to adequately supply the needs that are brought to its attention. It has been repeatedly observed that those who will have nothing to do with the organization in the way of support are most zealously prompt to refer any who appeal to them for help to the Good Samaritans.

Since so many who have been members have recently severed their connection with the organization, there must be some dissatisfaction with the management. If people, instead of holding aloof or withdrawing and criticizing, would turn out to the annual meetings, make changes that they think desirable and elect a roster of officers that will be satisfactory, we shall be enthusiastically glad and will pledge ourselves to stick by them faithfully. This appeal has been made before.

That Clinton needs such an organization has been shown before and may be shown again by a brief recital of a recent case. A family, not altogether unworthy, a father, mother and three children; the father sick with flu and ordered to stay in doors for about two weeks; not a cook stove or other article of furniture except a very few dishes and two or three pans and skillets. During one of the coldest, bleakest nights of this winter they slept huddled together, sick father and the rest, on the floor rolled up in three or four old quilts. When first seen in this shape on a very cold, raw day, the children were very sparsely clothed, a little 18-months old girl with nothing on except a very foul little slip. Our funds were scarce but arrangements were made by which they could be made fairly comfortable. The man is making good wages now, has a bright, outlook and is aspiring to something better, wants to get his children in Sunday School and his oldest bright-looking eight-year old girl in school. I may add that the Good Samaritans, while taking charge of the case, have been assisted by a worthy, sympathetic man, a Good Samaritan at heart, who doubtless does not wish to have his name and kindness published. And we had real and substantial help from some others.

D. J. BRIMM, President.

COMING—SMILIN' THROUGH!

Ground Hog Comes Out
But Goes Back in Hole

The opportunity presented to the ground hog Saturday to test his ability to forecast the weather for the next six weeks is without a parallel of atmosphere conditions within a number of years on February 2. The weather map showed that fair weather prevailed over almost the entire country with only a cloudy area proceeding across the extreme region of the Eastern states. So when the ground hog came from his lair Saturday morning at sunrise his shadow was cast on the ground with such a convincing representation of his emaciated and lean frame that he quickly scurried to his burrow, there to await the more favorable conditions which spring would usher to his greater comfort. If the weather had been cloudy he would have cast no shadow and remaining away from his lair would have been an indication of the end of winter—a condition more acceptable to human kind after its experiences of the past month in winter weather.

The connection of the ground hog with February 2 as the pivotal date which decides the trend of the season at this time of the year also applies to the day as celebrated in the church as Candlemas day. February 2 was thus set apart in 492 to commemorate the purification of the Virgin Mary and the presentation of the infant Jesus in the temple. Thus in observance of the feast it received the name of Candlemas because lighted candles were borne in the church processions on that day, being suggested by the declaration of the priests in temple at Jerusalem that the infant Jesus would become the light of the world.

In England the future of the weather from February and on toward the coming of spring was connected entirely with the condition of weather on Candlemas day—the idea being the same as to fair or cloudy conditions affecting the same in America.

The habits of the ground hog are such that even in the spring and summer when he seeks his food—entirely vegetable in character—he comes out of his lair early in the morning, and late in the afternoon. His lair is from ten to 15 feet in the earth and is usually found on a hillside. When he retires in the early fall to spend the winter he is fat like all animals which hibernate in the cold season of the year. After his long winter sleep his flesh becomes thin and his appearance emaciated, so emerging from his lair February 2, if the day be fair he becomes frightened at his weary and wan looking form and thinks his shadow is that of some other animal and thus frightened returns to his den for more favorable conditions which will not occur until six weeks more of winter.
