"What are you children all dressing up for this morning?" asked Mrs. Rabbit, when she peeked into the children's room.

"Why, Mother dear, this is Lincoln's birthday. Have you forgotten? I am surprised!" answered Bobbie.

"Excuse me," said Mrs. Rabbit. "You see, I have so many things to think of that I forget, while you children have only your school."

The bell in the Rabbitville school house was still ringing as the bunnies scampered out of the house all dressed up in their Sunday-go-meeting clothes. On the way they were met by Tessie Squirrel, who was also arrayed in her "bestest" outfit.

"Are either of you going to speak a piece?" asked Tessie, almost out of breath from running.

"No-o-o," hesitated Bobbie. "Are you?"

"Yes, but it is very short," replied Tessie.

"What of it?" asked Billie, all curiosity.

"Wait and you will get a great surprise," said Tessie, as they went up the Rabbitville school steps.

The sun was shining full in the school room when the exercises began and when all those who had to speak pieces were through, the teacher said: "We will now hear what it was that made Abraham Lincoln great. Tessie, will you tell us?" Tessie Squirrel walked upon the platform amid a profound silence and said:

"The thing which made Abraham Lincoln great was his LOVE."

And as the bunnies went home, Billie said to Bobbie: "Let's tell Mother what made Abraham Lincoln great."

"Yes," replied her brother, "I know what makes Mother great!"
