State Study Committee Visits Whitten Village

The South Carolina Committee on Mental Health and Mental Institutions, headed by Pickets Senator Earle E. Morris, visited Whitten Village, near Clinton, yesterday to view new construction and to observe new programs in action.

The visit here by the committee was a step to accelerate South Carolina's efforts to aid the state's retarded children.

Following the Clinton visit, the nine-member study group will meet in Charleston this morning (Thursday) for an all-day survey of the mental health program.

The morning session will be devoted to the report the committee will make to the 1965 General Assembly, Morris said. In the afternoon, the Association for Retarded Children and trustees of the proposed $3 million Retarded Children's Center at Summerville will be heard.

Scheduled to brief the committee on plans for the new center are Dr. Vince Moseley of Charleston, chairman of the board of trustees, and Dr. Ernest Cicinea, the superintendent.

The federal government is expected to put up about $1.1 million to match $2 million appropriated by the 1964 legislature for the Summerville Center, Morris said. He was optimistic that construction can begin soon on the 350-acre site, already acquired at a price of some $173,000.

"I think they can get started early in 1965," Morris said, "but there's still some red tape about the federal matching funds."

Initially, the center will have 500 beds, Morris reported, with 750 beds projected as the ultimate goal. He praised Dr. Moseley, the trustee, and Dr. Cicinea, predicting their efforts will result in an outstanding program that will benefit the entire state.

Morris said he was hopeful also that construction can begin soon on a diagnostic clinic at the South Carolina Medical College in Charleston.

More than $85,000 is being sought in the 1965 budget for operation of the Charleston clinic, the senator said. The plan is to have all of the 1,000-to-1,200 children now on waiting lists at such places as Whitten Village and Pinelands visit the clinic for determination of the services available to meet each applicant's needs.

Dept. of Performing Arts Being Added at College

A department of performing arts is being added to the Presbyterian College curriculum to offer comprehensive study in art, drama and music, Dean Joseph M. Gettys announced today.

He said drama and music will start in the fall of 1965; art, in 1966. They are conceived as a single large program, within the liberal arts framework, encompassing these three major fields of interest.

Dr. Gettys pointed out the offerings of the new department will include formal courses in theory and technique as well as private lessons given individually. He already is engaged in lining up well-trained instructors of established competence within each field.

The department of performing arts represents an expansion of the college's present courses in fine arts. It will also incorporate within its total program the previous work of the robed choir, the band and public speaking. The program is designed to bring an increased appreciation of our cultural heritage, while helping to develop in students their creative and interpretive gifts of self-expression.

Courses in speech will be associated with drama. As the art program develops, it will touch upon some areas of architecture, and later commercial art and fashion design. The department curriculum will include 11 courses in art, seven in drama, four in speech and eight in music—in addition to provisions for private music lessons and work in applied art and drama.

Belk Auditorium will serve as home for the new department of performing arts at Presbyterian College. This versatile $500,000 structure combines a 1,200 capacity auditorium of unusual acoustical quality with a three-story fine arts section composed of studio rooms, sound-proof practice areas, dressing rooms and other facilities required by the program.

The auditorium has drawn the high praise of performing artists ranging from the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra to the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo.

Telephone Co. Observes 85th Year of Service

"This month we celebrate our 85th anniversary," says Clinton Southern Bell Manager D. H. Martin. "We were incorporated under the laws of New York State on December 20, 1879, only about three years after the invention of the telephone."

"Growth until about 35 years ago was slow compared to what it has been since then," Martin continued. In November 1929 Southern Bell installed its one millionth telephone in Atlanta.

"At mid-year 1964, the company had 8,415,000 telephone in service." Southern Bell and independent companies together now serve approximately 11 million telephones.

In 1960, wage payments to employees in South Carolina amounted to $8,538,000; and 1963 wages were up to $22,318,000. In South Carolina, the telephone company paid $229,000 in taxes for 1963; a total of $16,836,000 was paid out in taxes.

"In other words, we pay $4.43 per main telephone per month in taxes," Martin added that this does not include the 10 per cent Federal Excise tax now placed on local and long distance rates.

"For the first 50 years of Southern Bell's operation, equipment was crude compared to what we have today," commented Martin. "Some of the older citizens can remember when you went down to the telephone office to place a long distance call, and they can remember turning that crank and saying "Hello, Central" to place a local call."

Times have indeed changed. Introduction of dial service had been one of the greatest stimulants to growth. Columbia became the first city in Southern Bell to convert to 100 per cent dial in 1922. Southern Bell's last "Hello, Central" exchange in South Carolina, Marion, goes dial on December 20. As it goes, tomorrow's telephone, Touch-Tone, comes to the state for the first time. "Instead of a rotary dial, it features push-buttons," says Martin.

"We are pleased with the progress we've made in our 85 years," Martin continued, "and even more with the advances we've made in equipment and service since World War II. But there is much to be done yet. For example, only 65 per cent of the families in our South Carolina area have telephones."

"We are constantly striving to make rural service better, and plan to eventually eliminate the necessity for eight-party lines in rural areas, reducing them to four-party," Martin added that urban four-party lines also will be eliminated in the future.
