Whitten Village 4-H Club Girls In Annual Banquet

One of the highlights of the 4-H club year at Whitten Village is the annual banquet for members and guests.

This year's spring event was in the new and modern Home Economics Building, one of the facilities recently completed.

Around 70 girls, members of the Whitten Village junior and senior 4-H clubs, along with Laurens County Extension Service personnel and Whitten Village staff members, gathered for the 15th annual event.

While the banquet was in progress the 4-H girls joined with other Whitten Village groups in providing musical entertainment.

When guest speaker L. B. Massey of Clemson later rose to make his talk he told the girls he had planned to discuss and emphasize to them the "importance of happiness in their lives," but after hearing their singing he felt "this was not necessary."

Mr. Massey, Piedmont District extension service agent, complimented the girls on their singing and the skills they had acquired through club work.

"You club members are a part of 65,000 in South Carolina—all involved in the same thing — learning new skills, and how to live and play together," Mr. Massey said.

The girls in the weeks before the banquet had planned and carried out the menu, decorations, and entertainment under the direction of Mrs. Beatrice Sloan, director of the Whitten Village homemakers department.

Mrs. Sloan heads up the 4-H program at Whitten Village, receiving monthly assistance from Miss Myrtice Taylor, county home demonstration agent, and Miss Marie Hegler, assistant agent.

The main 4-H projects in which the Whitten Village girls work are food, nutrition and clothing projects. They participate in the county-wide club program and have many ribbons to show for their winning entries in Laurens County Fair competition.

The chic white blouses and green skirts worn by some of the members at the banquet attested to their sewing skills. Green and white are the club colors.

Their officers demonstrated leadership qualities at the banquet. Charlene Gates, vice-president of the senior club, was master of ceremonies. Heather Horton, secretary of the senior club, gave the welcome and Donna Seigler, recreation chairman of the junior club, led the pledge of allegiance. The program was concluded with the 4-H Club pledge led by Daisy Puckett.
