It stands the severest cold, and is therefore the grass we have; it does not require land as rich as some other crops, but the richer the land the better it pays. All winter crops should be on rich land. If the reader has no very rich land, it is difficult to make it rich suddenly. Stable mannie should always be used in attempts to enrich poor land stable manure.

rye, barley and oats may all be seeded down. Grass and clover are sown broadcast; lucerne, rye and barley, intended for cutting and feeding green, should be sowed in drills fifteen to eighteen inches apart. Some sow four to five bushels, and we begin to hear of 140 bushels or upwards, per acre, being made under such conditions. In these cases, however, the measurements have not been made in a manner to satisfy every one. Oats may also be sown on corn and on the same land, sowing the seed and turning them under with the weeds and stubble. Cotton seed and phosphate-twenty-five bushels of the former to one hundred pounds of the latter, is excellent manure for the crop, plowed in with the oats. The cotton seed must be killed when used at these carly sowings, else they will come up and contribute little to the grown of the oats. Remember it was stated in a recent number, that oats sown in drills withstood the cold better than those sown broadcast. Coming up in a shallow trench, they are protected from the cold winds by the intervening ridges; and the rains settle them better after freezes, and wash down soil from the ridges to cover their roots still deeper. They are easily drilled by running furrows as near each other as can be done without the dirt from one furrow filling the other, sowing seed and manure broadcast, then brushing lightly across the rows. Where the land will admit of the rows run-

Preparation of land for wheat, if not already under way, should begin at once. High, dry knolls, rather wanting in vegetable matter, are best adapted to wheat. It is a mouted point whether the land should be broken very deep. If broken deep, it absorbs and retains more moisture in the spring, which is unfavorable to a wheat crop. The land, however, must be the crop. The land, however, must be the crop of three or four inches; this is essential.
