Beat Company,

YOU are ordered to parade, completely equipped, in front of the Town Hall, on SATURDAY, the 1st of April, at 2 o'clock, for inspection and drill.

JAMES O'HANLON, Captain.

N. B.—Although dress cannot make the soldier, it gives tone to a laudable spirit of emulation and pride, (which every man should feel) whilst it adds to the appearance and discipline of troops, and reminds them of the character they assume, and the duty they have to perform. With a view to this end, it is desirable that the members of the above company will appear in parade in white pantaloons and blue coats. This is requested that none need comply with, unless it suits their own convenience and pleasure. It is made in accordance with the feelings of many, who are in favor of uniformity.

Wilt thou think of me maiden, when far, far away I roam o'er the plains of the wilderness west; Or ride on the billows, whitened with spray; And sit full'd by the roar of the waters to rest!

Wilt thou think of me maiden, purchase thou shouldst hear Some friend less forgetful pronounce my poor name; And think that unshaken by danger or fear, I follow the bright—fleeing bubble—of Fame!

Wilt thou think of me maiden, when mid the gay throng Thou lovest the bowl that seems brim full of joy; When thy heart is delighted with 'hope's syren song,' And thy soul swims in pleasure—without one alloy?

Wilt thou think of me maiden, when some gentle youth Shall breathe to thee vows of devotion and love; And believe that my heart, fraught with fervor and truth, Still lingers with thee—wherever I rove?

Wilt thou think of me maiden, if fair fortune smiles, And strees thy life's pathway with sweet scented flowers; If tender affection each sorrow beguiles, And thy soul be enchanted by hope's magic powers!

Yes, yes, thou wilt think of me maiden, I know, And pity that love which thou canst not return— Aye! wish that my heart may those feelings out grow, Which thou canst not respond to, and vain would not spurn.

Yet believe me, dear maiden, where'er I may be, No time and no place can those feelings decay— For aye! will I dwell on those moments and tears, And weep o'er thy misery and smile at thy joy.

But if fat—be less kind than it seems to thee now; (Oh! judgment it may not shall still be my pray'r) If anguish and care settle down on thy brow, And thy hopes be o'ercast with the shade of despair.

If sickness and sorrow their influence shed— And thy spirit be broken by fortune's dark frown; If despondency's gloom thy bright pathway o'er spread, And the mantle of night o'er thy prospects be thrown

If thou shouldst be slighted by friend and by lover, And pleasure's soft hand that now circles thee round; If the bowl which with joy once seemed to run o'er, Untasted, be dashed from thy lips to the ground.

Ah! surely, proud maiden, thou'lt think of me then, And think of these times thou canst never recall. Perchance, thou mayst wish, too, to see Him again, Who can joy in the fortune, and weep at thy fall.

Then send round the world thy soft message of love, On the swift flowing gales, thro' the air let it come— Or let some gentler courier—the sweet coming dove, From the wild, or the deep, call thy wretched home

REPORT

Of the meeting of the Agricultural Societies, held at the Carolina Coffee-House, in Charleston, on Wednesday, 23d of February, 1826, pursuant to public advertisement.

In the course of the past year, the Agricultural Society of St. John's, Colleton, addressed a circular to her sister societies in the state, enclosing the following preamble and resolutions:—

Whereas, the blessings which agriculture, under divine favor, is calculated to bestow upon man, are so rich and manifold, as almost, if not entirely to exceed his capacity either to enumerate, or appreciate; and which, whilst they should lead us to express a sincere and hearty gratitude to the giver of every good and perfect gift, should also cause us to consider it as the bounden duty of every man, to use his utmost efforts to promote its best and most permanent interests. And whereas, under a government like that with which these United States are blessed, it is peculiarly fitting that we should encourage and cherish a love for agriculture, as an attachment to the soil begets an ardent love of country, and the cultivation of it is strikingly adapted to the creation and maintenance of a bold, hardy, independent, and patriotic militia, who would not only be fully competent to defend our country in case of foreign invasion, but also to secure it against refractory and aspiring demagogues at home. The truth of this position has been too often illustrated to need further proof in confirmation of it. And whereas, by the powerful effects of preconcerted and united measures, commerce has ever secured to itself the continuance and assistance of protecting laws; and like patronage is now extended to domestic manufactures, whilst agriculture, the parent and nourisher of rational liberty, is left to struggle, as it were, for its very existence, unaided by any legislative interference, rendering it thereby imperiously necessary for its friends and supporters to step forward in its behalf, to secure to it all the benefits which can flow from the concerted and systematic measures of the wise and prudent.

Therefore, Resolved, That this society recommend to her sister societies throughout the state, to send three delegates, chosen from among their members, to meet at Columbia during the session of the Legislature, who shall constitute a society, which shall be known by the name of where special duty it shall be, to watch over the interests of agriculture—to suggest, when necessary, the passage of laws which might advance its interests—and to collect information upon all subjects connected with their official duties, from every available source; which, by being communicated to the individual societies of which they are members, would, of consequence, result in such a mass of agricultural information, as would, in due course, give rise to systems of agriculture, and rural economy generally, of such an improving nature, as would secure to the active operator all the success to his labors, which would be left with in the control of man.

Also, Resolved, That the third Wednesday in February next, being the 23d of the month, and the first Wednesday of the races in Charleston, be recommended as the day on which the delegates of these agricultural societies, that may adopt the foregoing resolutions, shall assemble at Charleston, with a view to framing a constitution and bye-laws for the government of the society contemplated to be established.

(Signed)

WILLIAM SEABROOK, President.
ISAAC AYLD, Cor. Sec. A. S. St. John's, Colleton.

The important measure proposed by the St. John's Colleton Agricultural Society, was concurred in by the following societies, appointing three delegates to represent them at the intended meeting. At the hour appointed, the following gentlemen attended in behalf of their respective societies:

St. John's, Colleton—Whitemarsh B. Seabrook, John R. Mathews and Joseph Whaley.
Pendleton—Thomas Pinckney, Jr. and John E. Callison.
South Carolina—William Washington, Edward Brown and James Colburn.
Barnwell District—John S. Bellinger and Barnett H. Brown.
St. Helena—Charles G. Capers, Thomas Atton Cohn and Charles W. Capers.
St. Paul's—Charles E. Rowland.
Col. Thomas Pinckney was called to the chair, and Edward Brown appointed secretary; when Mr. Whitemarsh B. Seabrook addressed the meeting explanatory of the object for which it had been convened, and of the importance of a general society to the agricultural interests of the state; after which the following resolutions were unanimously carried:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to report a constitution for an United Agricultural Society in this state, and that the Chairman be requested to nominate one delegate from each society represented at the meeting, to act as the committee.

Resolved, That Whitemarsh B. Seabrook, John E. Colburn, Edward Brown, John S. Bellinger, Charles G. Capers and Charles E. Rowland do constitute a committee for the purpose above stated.

Resolved, That the chairman be requested to become one of the committee.

Resolved, That this committee do adjourn to meet again on Friday evening next, at 6 o'clock.

(Signed)

THOMAS PINCKNEY, jr. Chairman,
EDWARD BROWN, Secretary.

At the adjourned meeting, held agreeably to the last resolve of the previous one, the Barnwell Agricultural Society was represented by Mr. Barnwell, one of its delegates, attending. Dr. Seiven, the President, Mr. Frederick Frazer the Corresponding Secretary, and Messrs James Heyward and James Bowman, Members of the Barnwell District Agricultural Society, attended the meeting, and expressed their concurrence in its object and proceedings. The committee presented, through their chairman, its report, which was approved and accepted by the meeting.

REPORT.

The committee appointed to prepare and digest a plan of association for the agricultural societies of this state, beg leave to report. That with a view to ensure the accomplishment of their object, they have deemed it advisable, by avoiding all unnecessary detail, to draft such articles of association only, as are essential to the organization of the contemplated Union. Your committee are decidedly of opinion, that it would be judiciously to attempt, at this time, to effect all of the important measures in prospect, to progress with due caution, and to consult the general feeling of the community, they are persuaded, to be the proper course to be pursued.

At the first conference, certain difficulties presented themselves relative to the location of the Association, and the manner in which the annual contributions of each society should be apportioned. From the disposition of the committee, however, to yield all sectional prejudices, and to remove every impediment in the way of their purpose, those difficulties have happily been removed.

As the proposed plan of union is to be submitted to every agricultural society of this state, for their approbation and sanction, it is confidently anticipated that no minor consideration will deter them from promptly giving their assent. The individual societies possessing the right of offering amendments to the contemplated constitution, the general meeting, at its first session, will thus be enabled to avail itself of the information and experience of the whole agricultural community, and hence, to devise a more enlarged and efficient scheme of government.

When the first meeting shall have been held, your committee conceive, that the greatest difficulty will have been surmounted. The feelings incident to such an interesting assemblage, would alone create an excitement, highly favorable to the accomplishment of their general views.

The agriculture of South Carolina may be said to be confined to particular districts. While in one direction, the scene that opens to our view is bright and cheering, in many sections of the state, dilapidated houses, and abandoned farms, show the prostration of a system, which, for causes not now necessary to be detailed, the wisdom of foresight of the constituted authorities should have been exerted to prevent. Shall the sites, once the seat of industry, wealth and health, be restored to their pristine beauty and fertility, or shall they be destined to become the residence of the "handful of the black?" Shall an useful class of the community continue to grope in the labyrinth of Ethiopian stupidity, or shall they be instructed in the theory and practice of that profession, whose duty they now but nominally perform? Is agricultural science, by nature, circumscribed within narrow limits, or can its countless blessings be disseminated by private deal or public patronage? Are the farmers of this state so dead to their true interests, that they cannot be aroused to a simultaneous movement in the sacred cause of their vocation? To these questions, let the intelligence, the patriotism and the pride of South Carolina, respond.

That the proposed union may tend to promote the welfare of every class of the community—and to meliorate the physical condition of the state—and to place South Carolina on an eminence still higher than the elevated ground she now occupies, is the fervent prayer of the committee, individually and collectively.

WHITEMARSH B. SEABROOK Chairman,
EDWARD BROWN, Secretary to the Committee.

A constitution for the government of the contemplated Society, was next presented, which having been approved by sections and a full
