FROM THE N. Y. ENQUIRER. Mr. Editor - If the following lines are worthy of a place in your paper, by inserting them, you gratify one who is desirous of seeing himself in print.

Tell me old man, for thou should'st know, Where real happiness is found; Is it in halls of grandy show, Where titled dignities abound, Or tell me can it there be found? Not there, not there my son.

Is it where monarch's fill the throne, At whose dread summons all nations bow, Whose will is law, whose nod alone, Makes beggars kings, lays proud men low; Where titles, dignities abound, Or tell me can it there be found? Not there, not there my son.

Is it where some her temple rear, To which ambition's votaries crowd, Where man's oppress the soul appears, And of the mortal make a God; Where honor holds its light career, Say reverend father is it there? Not there, not there my son.

See'st thou my son, you lowly cell; Within an humble being dwell, Whose calm contentment best can tell, The joy, the pleasure, that he feels; Whose knees in daily reverence bow To God, from whom all blessings flow? 'Tis there, 'tis there, my son.

Mr. Shiel, at the meeting in question, delivered some striking observations on the advantages which the catholics have derived from the refusal to emancipate them. The penal laws, he observed, had united seven millions of people, by the firmest of all bonds - persecution - and by the agitation in which the people had been constantly kept by harangues and discussions, they had acquired strength and confidence.

National Gazette.

Mr. Hartford Convention Webster from Massachusetts.

This person is the privy councillor of Mr. J. Q. Adams, and the prime mover of the present administration. He is the manager of the house of representatives as Mr. Canning is of the house of commons. His immediate subaltern is Mr. Everett, who is in a fair way of becoming as complete a tergiversator as his leader: ready to assume any liver and perform any service that interest and ambition may dictate.

Extract from the famous war speech of Danl. Webster, made on the 14th Jan. 1814. Natchez, this said Danl. Webster is the third member of the coalition.

EXTRACT.

"It was not enough that government could make out its cause of war on paper and get the better of England in the argument. This was requisite; but not all that was requisite. The question of war or peace, in a country like this, is not to be compressed into a compass that would benefit a small litigation. It is not to be made to turn upon a pin. Incapable in its nature of being decided upon technical rules, it is unfit to be discussed in the manner which usually appertains to the forensic habit. It should be regarded as a great question, not only of right, but also of prudence and expediency.

I have heard no satisfactory vindication of the war on grounds like those. They appear not to have suited the temper of that time. Utterly astonished at the declaration of war, I have been surprised at nothing since. Unless all history deceived me, I saw how it would be prosecuted when I saw how it was begun. There is in the nature of things an unchangeable relation between rash counsels and feeble execution.

It was not, sir, the minority, that brought on the war. Look to your records, from the date of the Embargo in 1807, to June, 1812. Every thing that men could do, they did to stay your course. When at last they could effect no more, they urged you to delay your measures. They entreated you to give a little more time for deliberation, and to wait for favorable events. As if inspired for the purpose of arresting your progress, they laid before you the consequences of your measures just as we have seen them since take place. They predicted to you their effects on public opinion.

They told you instead of healing, they would inflame the political dissensions. They pointed out to you also what would and what must happen to you on the frontier. That which since hath happened, there is but their predictions, turned into history. Vain is the hope, then, of escaping just retribution, by imputing to the minority of the government or to the opposition among the people the disasters of these times. Vain is the attempt to impose thus on the common sense of mankind. The world has had too much experience of ministerial shifts and evasions. I has learned to judge of men by their actions, and of measures by their consequences.

From the New-Hampshire Patriot.

MR. DANIEL WEBSTER - AGAIN! We continue our extracts from Mr. Webster's war speech. This gentleman is now an "administration man" - he now proscribes all those who doubt the infallibility of a minority President - with him the doctrine is that such a President "can do no wrong" - with him it is now an unpardonable crime to censure the conduct of such a ruler.

The Catholic Clergy of Ireland, it is well known, have been lately employed in preparing a census of the population, distinguishing the numbers of each religious sect. The
