Mr. Olmsted, the geatleman therein men. for each and every pound of cocoons, as tioned, is now in this city but will leave it by him, ner or them raised, and with half the attention to succeed entirely that the premium has not before been in November ! We believes him, I ask in Carolina and other Southern States.

Letters received by the last packets from France, state that the sales of trees and cuttings of the Morus Multicaulis had ceased, in consequence of the greatly increasing demands from this country. The nursery. men there had not been prepared for such unusual and unexpected orders, and, after increasing their prices to 200 and 300 per gence ! cent., they finally quit selling their plants at any price, in order to cut them up, to propagate a supply for next season.

It has been frequently stated in the papers that the Morus Multicaulis is too tender to withstand the severity of the winters in Pennsylvania, and that the Alpine and Moretti, or Morus Macrophylla, were better adapted to this climate. It is believed that this opinion is erronaous, as there are now growing at the Bertram Botanic Garden three miles south west from Philadelphia, several trees of tha two last varieties, which were received from France ten years since, (soon after the Morus Multicaulis had been procured from Manilla.) The plants were slightly protected from the cold of the first winter, since which they never been shelter. ed, nor suffered the least injury from the frost. The largest tree of the Multicaulis is eighteen feet high and ten inches in circumference. The leaves are larger than those of the Macrophylla, and of a smoother and finer tex ure : they are preferred by the silk worms. Both varieties appear to be quite as hardy as the white mulberry
