

CAUTION! CAREFULLY READ LABELS ON ALL PATENT MEDICINES

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION
CONDEMNNS ALCOHOL AS DAN-GEROUS DRUG OF NO MED-ICINAL VALUE. BAD FOR KIDNEYS, NERVES
AND BRAIN

LAW REQUIRES ALL PATENT MED-ICINES CONTAINING ALCOHOL
TO BE SO LABELED

Read carefully all patent medicine labels to see if they contain alcohol. The law requires that all medicines containing alcohol must be so labeled for the protection of the public, thus classing alcohol as other dangerous, harmful, and habit-forming drugs.

The American Medical Association composed of the foremost men in the medical profession, came out with the statement in their recent meeting that alcohol is of no value in medicine, either as a drug or a stimulant. A recent investigation conducted in the Bellevue Hospital, New York, disclosed the fact that of 259 alcoholic patients examined sixty-eight per cent, more than half, began to drink before twenty-one years of age. As a result physicians all over the country refuse to prescribe alcohol under any condition.

As has been shown many acquire the alcohol habit before attaining maturity. There are many ways in which this habit had been acquired, but perhaps the commonest form has been through the medium of a patent medicine containing a great percentage of this deadly poison. Beef, wine, and iron for instance, is usually given to those convalescing from a severe illness. This is a favorite preparation given to children and has probably done more to develop the alcohol habit than the average person imagines.

Iron, of course, is the greatest blood purifier and strengthener known; on the other hand, alcohol is perhaps the deadliest poison to the tissue of the human system. It counteracts the efficiency of the iron and makes the condition worse. A sick person would be far better off if given just plain beef. The reason for the fallacy that beef, wine, and iron, is efficient is that the alcohol it contains imparts a feeling of stimulation and quickens the heart action, a temporary condition lasting as long as the alcohol affects the senses. That is why one must use such preparations continuously, so that the artificial stimulation may be kept up. The result often brings on a case of alcoholism.

It would be more beneficial in such cases to use a natural iron preparation free from the dangers of alcohol or other habit-forming drugs. For those who may be weak, anaemic, run down, or suffering from stomach, kidney or bladder trouble, or poor impoverished blood, an iron tonic of known purity is exceptional.
