

SOREHEAD AND LIMBERNECK

Successful Remedies for Two Prevalent Diseases

Clemson College, Sept. 2.—Sorehead is making its periodical visit to the poultry farms of the State. Mold in some form to which the chickens have access is responsible for this disease. Moldy grain and particularly moldy corn, moldy litter and scratching material are predisposing causes of a sorehead epidemic. To overcome this disease try at once to locate and remove the source of infection. Then send sixty cents to the Westmoreland Chemical and Color Co., Philadelphia, for a bottle of Fer-Sul, the best and cheapest remedy. Add one teaspoonful to a quart of water and immerse the head of each afflicted chicken in the solution for fifteen seconds. This enables the remedy to act on the air passages in the head and clear them of mucus. Two duckings daily for two days will cure practically all cases. Exterior applications of salves, grease, or liquids are useless.

The only other solution that is recommended by Prof. H. C. Hare of the Poultry Division is a teaspoonful of creolin in a quart of water. Immerse the head as previously advised. Salts and sulphur have been advised as a preventive, but they have proved useless. If chickens are kept away from mold, they will not have sorehead.

As is generally known, limberneck is caused by eating decomposed flesh. The maggots found in this putrid flesh are not harmful to poultry, according to a test made this summer at Clemson College. First, remove and bury any dead animal or bird. Buy a little asafetida. Cut off a piece the size of a pea and give this amount to each sick chicken three times daily. Three doses are usually sufficient to effect a complete cure. Chickens that could barely move and were almost dead have been brought back to normal health by means of this simple remedy.

HIGH COST OF CAMPAIGNING.
(Charleston Post.)

The Democrats, it is announced, will seek to raise a fund of five million dollars for campaign purposes next year, which is twice as much as the maximum ever before in hand for such uses. It was reported in Republican circles that the amount would be ten millions, but this has been set straight by the statement of the party's national treasurer. It is only one-half that sum which is to be raked together for booming the party next year.

In the Bryan campaigns the war chest was so lean its ribs rattled, and if it had been suggested that a million dollars should and would be available everybody who did not drop dead with amazement would have laughed himself sick at the humorous fancy. But of course, as the Democratic treasurer says, politics, like everything else, has gone up mightily in price, and what could be had and was had for $2,500,000 three years ago, will easily cost just what the party is able to raise, and be dear, perhaps, at that but five million is fixed as the figure. Wouldn't Mark Hana be stunned and shocked if he could peek out now and see the despised Democrats calmly preparing to make up a political chest of several times the best sum he was ever able to get out of the opulent Republicans?

The Democrats, says the treasurer, are preparing for one of the most intensive campaigns ever pulled, and, for that amount of money it surely should be a corker. The voice of the orator will be heard the clock round and the movies will work overtime with electioneering films. The Republicans no longer set the pace in this sort of thing, and we shouldn't be surprised if the Democrats start the big show with a pretty nice "bunch of money," as the ribald might put it.

TOBACCO NEXT?

(Saluda Standard.)

We learn that the veto of the abolitionists will shortly fall upon tobacco. The use of tobacco is not conducive to good health, they say. At all events, this is true of its abuse.

We fear there is only too much accuracy in this reasoning. The abuse of tobacco is, unquestionably, harmful. It is even poisonous. And if the widespread use of an article is a prelude to widespread overindulgence in it, the correct attitude of every discerning citizen is beyond discussion. The use of the article must be entirely suppressed.

This newspaper wishes to declare its position in no uncertain terms. Every influence that threatens national health must be abolished, and if tobacco is harmful, tobacco must go.

So must the corset. Many specialists in hygiene have analyzed the effect of the corset on the female organs, and their verdict is "thumbs down." This newspaper hardly claims to be an arbiter in a debate concerning feminine costuming, but it claims, at least, the merit of consistency. If tobacco and corsets are endangering public health, we demand a death sentence upon them. Also upon the high-heeled shoe. Also face-powder. The medical profession has long ago declared itself.

And these are only the beginning of our list; but there is not space in one editorial to tabulate the whole. In succeeding weeks we hope to enumerate all things that must be abolished—if the use of a thing and its abuse are identical. The condemned items to be listed are multitudinous, but if we live long enough we hope to catalogue them all.

There wasn't any bugler there—blowing taps:
The Regimental Chaplain tho' was round:

And I'm telling you that I was feeling blue,
The day they put my Bunkie in the ground.

We showed him how to do "right shoulder arms"

And told him all a "Jirene" ought to know:

We slept together, but to-day he sleeps

Near "No Man's Land" beneath the mud and snow.

He said his Ma and Sister back at home

Kissed him a dozen times in fond good-byes.

And when he talked about them I could see

That look of longing shining in his eyes.

I hate to think of how his mother feels—

A mother's lonesomeness is worse than mine.

I'd write his folks a letter, only that

This writing business ain't much to my line.

I don't know what to do when I'm so blue.

Our Bunkie's gone; and seems that all I know

Is I'd like to put a forget-me-not upon his grave

Near "No Man's Land," beneath the mud and snow.
