Warning To Hunters!

They come to you with a prevailing idea that it is not necessary to have a hunter's license to hunt game except when a gun is used. The law is very clear and plain and makes no distinction as to weapons used. It is against the law to pursue game without a license or to hunt with sling shot or other weapon as much as with a gun.

Notice is hereby given that all violators of the law will be dealt with. JOE M. CAUGHMAN, Game Warden.

TURN UNDER COTTON STALKS TO LESSEN WEEVIL DAMAGE

Clemson College, Oct. 27.—The conditions this fall for spreading over a wide territory. When the dry weather set in and the fruiting stopped, migration started, and at the present time the weevil has reached the line passing a little south of Greenville through Bookman, Camden, and approximately Darlington.

Weevil damage on many farms in the southern part of the state has been severe during the past season, but a portion of the damage for which the weevil is held responsible was due to weather conditions, says Prof. A. F. Conrad, State Entomologist. Serious injury may be expected in Beaufort, Charleston, Hampton, Allendale, Barnwell, Colleton and Bamberg Counties next season. It is extremely important, at this time, that the very best attention is given to the destruction of all cotton stalks at the earliest possible date.

Over many farms in the southern part of the state the fruiting of cotton is over, and the stalks can be destroyed without any loss in the crop. This may be accomplished by chopping the stalks with a stalk cutter and plowing them under. Where horse-power is available they may be plowed under by having a beam attached to the plow to knock down the stalks so that they may be covered. It is immaterial what method may suit the individual farmer best, but to allow stalks to remain on the cotton field is a most dangerous practice under boll weevil conditions and is a sign of very careless farming. Destroying the cotton stalks is the most effective control against the weevil.

COLORED FAIR A SUCCESS.

The Lexington County colored fair, which was held Friday and Saturday of last week, following the white people's fair, was a decided success in every way, particularly in view of the fact that this was the first year of the fair. While the exhibits could have been more numerous they were entirely creditable to the colored people. A good crowd attended and enjoyed the meeting. Green I Richardson, promoter of the fair, and the other officials are entirely satisfied and propose to have another and better fair next year.

WORKS IN FIELD.

The high price of cotton is responsible for many unusual things, but nobody would have believed, that it would have so extended its influence (you may take your choice as to whether we ought to say benign or baneful) as to cause certain well known citizens to perform manual labor. It is a fact, however, that Joe Caughman, game warden and town clerk, was actually seen at work in the broiling sun of Monday with a cotton sack on his back picking cotton to beat the band, which, according to all reports, is picking some. Joe says he didn't need the money but cotton was worth just too much to go to waste.
