Sentiments of Governor Chamberlain.

It must be considered that our Governor is a capital hand to make a speech. We are not sure, but that in speech making he would beat even President Grant, but still for managing an army or a nation, we should prefer the President. We notice with pleasure the favorable comments of the press North and South, on the recent speech of the Governor in Charleston. The good people at home and abroad, all commend the Governor's sentiments on education, and reform, and especially that there should be an efficient and economical administration of our State Government; and what he has effected in that direction has inspired the disparing with hope for the future of our State. We cannot think that the governor sympathises with the Union-Herald in the idea that the State Agricultural College should be killed in its infancy because it did not happen to be born in the vigor of full grown manhood. We cannot presume that our prudent and discreet Governor would favor the policy of being generous before being just, or that he would ask the people of the State to be so prudent as to neglect, at least to pay the interest on the money furnished by the General Government to support the Agricultural College, which has been taken and appropriated by a former administration for its own use. The government allnwed the use of one tenth part of the original sum to be applied for the purchase of an agricultural farm, but the Trustees in their economy only proposed to apply the interest for this object, but the State has neglected to pay even this, and left the trustees without the means as yet of even paying for the farm purchased and meeting other contingent expenses,

The Governor has a way of translating his words into actions which gives them peculiar emphasis. Ex-Governor Perry in a recent letter to the News and Courier pays the Governor the following tribute.

In the last election I opposed Governor Chamberlain, with all my influence, because I thought he would sustain and encourage his party in their corruption and dishonesty, in their oppressive taxation and extravagant expenditure of the public money. I now cheerfully confess that in all this I was mistaken, and that his administration has been honest, wise and patriotic, as far as it was possible for him to make it such.

Orangeburg.

Orangeburg C. H., S. C., November 20—Of all the counties we have visited in this State, none have impressed us more favorably than Orangeburg. It is one of the best counties in the State, and, judging by what we have seen of it, far in advance, in material prosperity, of most of the other counties. It is large in area and population, and is skirted and traversed by rivers and railroads affording ample means and conueniences for transportation. The soil is generally fertile, and the climate rivals that of Aiken, which is almost on a geographical line with Orangeburg. It is ostensibly an agricultural county, producing, usually, from thirty to thirty-five thousand bales of cotton, The crop this year, however, it is estimated, will not reach more than 18,000 or 20,000 bales, in consequence of the drouth that prevailed last summer. The Orangeburg Agricultural Society is one of the best conducted and most flourishing in the State, and the County Fair attests the the intelligence and industry of the inhabitants. The Fair grounds and buildings are the finest and most complete we have seen anywhere.

This is rearly one of the prettiest and most thriving places in the State with a population of seventeen hundred inhabitants, handsome brick stores, residences, churches, schools, &c., and a very necessary appendage to all towns, a good hotel, kept by Mr. Meroney, where the traveller can find rest and comfort. The corner-stone of the new courthouse is to be laid here on next Thursday by the Masonic fraternity. The building will be an imposing and convenient one, and is greatly needed here. Our visit to Orangeburg was pleasant and profitable."

The above is what a passing stranger, and correspondent of the Charleston News, says of our goodly "Burg." All he says about its being a genial and pleasant place will be more than endorsed by those who have summered and wintered here. As a sanitary resort no doubt this place is superior in some respects to Aiken. They have the start of us there in one respect. A gentleman of that place took pains to advertise its advantages all through the North by the skillful use of printers ink. We have a dry soil, a softer and more congenial climate for winter than Aiken, with surroundings more inviting and pleasant. We have literal ideas, willing to live and let live. It is true our people here have not taken as much pains to be prepared to "take in strangers," as in some other sections of the South. It is not with us as reported of a certain section in Florida, that the people of that locality "live on fish and strangers." We can live without strangers, but know how to do by them as we would be done by in return. There can be no question but for invalids in the persuit of health, this section of the State would be found far preferable for winter, than the low lands of the coast, either in this State or Florida. No pleasanter place can be found to spend the winter in the South than what is offorded here especially for those whose sanitary condition demands a change of climate.
