its endorsement of W. R. Hearst has stirred up a tempest in a tea-We expected opposition from the smaller journals, as their editors, as a rule, are gentiemen of fair morality and really believe that they are right in advocating other candidates than Mr. Hearst. In this course they think they are advocating the cause of right and advancing the chances of success of the Democratic party. This is highly commendable as men, but as practical politiciaus it proves them to be lumentable failures. When however, we see the editor of a great daily like The State take up an impossible candidate because of the fact, or mawkish sentiment that his most formidable opponent expects to spend money to win passes comprehension. There has never been a candidate before the people who successfully concluded in the Suhas not had to spend money to preme Court, is the most signal win, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, if he did not have ples since the trusts seized the it and did not spend it, he did not toin.
