

Miss Agnes Miller, of Chicago, speaks to young women about dangers of the Menstrual Period - how to avoid pain and suffering and remove the cause by using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"To Young Women:—I suffered for six years with dysmenor-rhea (painful periods), so much so that I dreaded every month, as I knew it meant three or four days of intense pain. The doctor said this was due to an inflamed condition of the uterine appendages caused by repeated and neglected colds.

"If young girls only realized how dangerous it is to take cold at this critical time, much suffering would be spared them. Thank God for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, that was the only medicine which helped me any. Within three weeks after I started to take it, I noticed a marked improvement in my general health, and at the time of my next monthly period the pain had diminished considerably. I kept up the treatment, and was cured a month later. I am like another person since. I am in perfect health, my eyes are brighter, I have added 12 pounds to my weight, my color is good, and I feel light and happy."—Miss Agnes Miller, 25 Potomac Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The monthly sickness reflects the condition of a woman's health. Anything unusual at that time should have prompt and proper attention. Fifty thousand letters from women prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regulates menstruction and makes those periods painless.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM: - Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has greatly benefitted me. I will tell you how I suffered. My trouble was painful menstruation. I felt as each month went by that I was getting worse. I had severe bearing-down pains in my back and abdomen.
"A friend advised me to try Mrs. Pinkham's medicine. I did so and am now free from all pain during my periods."— Jessie C. Lindbeck, 1201 6th Street, Rockford, Ill.

* Terrific Struggle of a Fisherman With a Contest-Returning From a Sail, Jacob Langtin Came ir Contact With a Terror

* HE length of a press dispatch is not always measured by the importance of the event it chronicles upou an individual life, says the San Francisco Bulletin.

"They that go down to the sea in ships," as a rule, meet their fate unberalded; the glamor that public recognition casts over the hero is not for

A story of suffering, courage, and endurance that speaks well for every day manhood and womanhood lies behind this little four-line item that appeared in the daily papers one day last week from Salinis:

"March 9.-Jacob Langtin, a farmer living near Kailer's Point, had a narrow escape from a devilfish while fishing off the coast vesterday."

Jacob Langtin and his wife. Susan cultivate a small piece of land on the south side of a little point that sticks out into the Pacific Ocean below Monterey Bay, known as Kailer's Point. A good-isezed creek runs by one side of their land, and here Jacib has a boat landing and several boats, for when the occasion fits he loves to fish off shore. It is his one amusement.

For thirty years, as boy and man. Jacob Langtin followed the sea, and now, well past his prime, he has settled down on the little spot of earth he calls home with his wife to spend the remainder of his days in sunshine, and within hearing distance of the roll of the surf.

It was about a week ago that return. ng one afternoon from a fishing trip. he met the accident that turned his iron gray bair a shade lighter and still makes sleep a threatening nightmare

Langtin had spent the afternoon fishing off shore and was slowly rowing in toward the little lagoon where he usually ties up his boat after such trips. He was within a couple of hundred yards of the shore when, happening to glance around to take his bearings, he noticed a bunch of tangled drift almost on his bow. He gave one oar s twist to drive his boat closer to it. Like all shore dwellers, his eye roved over it to see if it contained wreckage of any value. As his boat swished alongside he gave it a poke with an oar to stir up the flotsam. His eye was on a large-sized box jammed in between two pieces of piles. He gave it a poke with his oar to see whether it was fast and filled or empty. The oar glanced on the side of the box and drives himself furiously in the water struck a round, smooth thing that looked like a burnished piece of fire looking beak reared itself out of the jecting several feet beyond his mouth, ocean and two wicked round glazed and paddling all the small fry that severing pieces of the terrible arm that was trying to overturn the boat and drag it down. The tentacle began to weaken, but while he was yet backing at it another shot out of the water and fell heavily across the boat: another followed it.

All this time he was dimly conscious of his wife running up and down the beach, crying frenziedly for help. She could see plainly the struggle that was going on and knew that something terrible was happening, without at all comprehending what monster it was that had her husband in its grasp. In her agony ane waded out waist deep into the water. The sun was turning to a red globe of fire in the west, but it had lost its heat.

Langtin now says that in this terrible situation his mind took in the minutest details of the scene around him. the green of the hills, the trees stirred by the light breezes, the red sinking sun, the sheen of the light upon the water, the calmly neaving ocean, and his frenzied wife upon the beach. There was no help anywhere, and his reart swelled in rage against the cold helplessness around him.

If he was to be saved it must be by his own strength and his own courage. He had never prayed and he did not know how.

By this time the terrible monster had two of its great arms around the unfortunate man; one wrapped around his legs and one around his body. Langtin was clinging to the seat with one arm and the other hand he was hacking at the death-gripping arms of the devilfish, especially where they lay across the thwarts and offered him the chance of a solid blow.

As the creature seemed about to lift its repulsive body over the side of the boat, Langtin found a chance to strike it a heavy blow between the eyes. It gave back slightly, but still maintained the hold of its tentacles. Not only that, but another rose, waying in the air, and circled his waist.

The tentacles that now swept around his body and seemed to be crushing the very life out of him had no further power to daunt him. He seized the repulsive, slimy thing with one hand and sank with it to the bottom of the boat. With two powerful blows where it bent across the thwart he severed it from the creafure's body.

A few more blows were needed to sever the remaining tentacles, and the noises, slid off into the water, leaving an inky trail behind it. It was none too soon. With the last | years.

For a minute his wife had stood waist deep in the water watching, Monster of the Deep-His Wife Saw the | with fast-beating heart the terrible struggle taking place in the little row-bont. She had entered the water with a half-defined idea of wading or swimming out to the assistance of her husband, so terrible was the agony of her own inaction and helplessness.

A half-conscious gesture of her hus band had stayed the rash act, and had brought her to her senses. She hesttated but a momoent to collect her scattered wits.

Then she hastened toward a skiff tied to the wharf. At first her tremb ling limbs would scarce support her but as she ran she gathered strength. Under ordinary circumstances the skift was too beavy for her to launch from where it lay on the beach. Yet now she managed to get the boat into the water. Terror gave her strength and some way she managed to work the boat in the direction of her husband Luckily, he was not more than 400 feet away. The fight was over before she reached the contestants, but her aid in reviving the exhausted man war more than timely It will be many long days before either fully recovers from the effects of that terrible fight. Langtin says he wouldn't go through the experience again for all the land in the country. His wife declares she still wakens from her sleep and the fearful dream that the terrible devilfish is reaching another great arm out of the sea to grasp her husband.

HUNTING OCEAN VAMPIRES. Monster Sometimes Reverses the Role and Becomes the Hunter. With the possible exception of the basking shark, the "Sea Devil" or "Ocean Vampire" is the largest of all the monsters of the deep. An unborn ocean vampire, taken from the mother, preserved at the British Museum, it five feet iong, and before mounting weighed twenty pounds. The mother measured some fifteen feet in length and quite as much in breadth.

It is at all times a dangerous undertaking to attempt to capture one of these monsters, says the Sunday Magazine, but particularly so in the case of a mother accompanied by her offspring. She is quite capable of reversing the role of hunter and hunted attacking and capsizing the boat containing her would-be captors, and of seeing that none of them escapes alive. "Imagine," writes the Hon. William Elliot, in describing the exciting sport he had in hunting ocean vampires, "a monster from sixteen to twenty feet across the back, full three feet in depth, possessed of powerful yet flexible flaps or wings, with which he or vaults high in the air, through which he skims like some enormous bird; his hose. The thing moved; a sharp ugly feelers (commonly called horns) proeyes stared at Langtin over the side constitute his food into that capacious receptacle-and you will have an idea, though an imperfect one, of this ex-

It pendages projected on each side of the head. These appendages take the form for Langtin to foresee his end should and character of limbs, being flexible he once be brought within reach of and capable of grasping prey and carrying it to the mouth. In this way fishing boats and vessels der the axe. He knew that this was of a much larger size have been but one of but seven or eight arms, dragged from their moorings and in some cases capsized by the ocean vam-Again and again he struck, each time pire's having laid hold of the anchor. An instance of this kind occurred in the harbor of Charleston. A schooner lying at anchor, suddenly and seemingly of its own volition, to the amazement and alarm of those on board, started at a furious rate across the harbor. Upon nearing the opposite bank its course changed so abruptly as almost to capsize the vessel, and it recrossed the harbor to its former moorings.

These mysterious flights across the harbor were repeated a number of times in the presence of hundreds of astonished spectators, who were utterly at a loss to account for the phenomenon. The migrations ceased as suddenly as they began. Not till then did the back and undulating flukes of an immense ocean vampire, appearing above the water of the harbor, disclose the motive power that caused it all.

One of the curious habits of the fish is to throw somersaults, sometimes at a considerable distance beneath the surface, sometimes at the surface, and sometimes in the air above the surface, The reason for this peculiar practice, which is kept up for hours, has, so far as the writer knows, never been conjectured. At times the great fish will throw himself bodily perhaps as much as ten or twelve feet into the air. A young man student of Columbia University, writing from Port of Spain, describes the flight of one of these sea monsters, which passed completely over him and the light boat he was rowing.

Bedrooms in Trees.

A remarkable hotel is in California, on the road between Santa Cruz and San Jose. California possesses the largest trees in the world, and a shrewd hotelkeeper has conceived the idea of utilizing as a wayside hostelry a group of these mammoths, thus saving himself the cost of building or rent. The hollow trunk of one tree, whose circumference is about twenty-two yards, is arranged as a reception room. and the surrounding space, sheltered by a thick roof of spreading branches, serves as dining room and smoking room. A number of other smaller hollow trunks make comfortable bedrooms, furnished in the most approved style, and some trees at a little distance are occupied by the hotel staff.

An iron cable which is claimed to be the largest in the world, has been finished at Lebanon, Pa. It is more than a mile long, and each link weight ninety-three pounds.

The fence about the Fort Belknap Indian reservation in Montana, which is forty miles wide and sixty miles long, has been finished. It probably is the longest fence in the world and has taken years in building. The plan is to protect' the flocks of herds of the Gros Ventres and Assiniboines from intrusion, as well as to keep them from straying.

A planist has to cultivate the eye so as to see fifteen hundred signs in one minute, the fingers to make two thousand movements; and the brain to understand all these signs, as well as direct all these movements. In play ing Weber's "Moto Perpetuo" a pianist has to read 4541 notes in less than four minutes, or about nineteen a second. but the eye can recieve only about ten consecutive impressions a second. So that in quick music it seems that a player does not see every note singly. but in groups, probably a bar or more at one view.

THE DEATH SENTENCE IN ENGLAND How They Made It Act as a Deterrent in the Good Old Days. The present agitation in England to abolish the pronouncing of the death sentence in cases where it is patent that capital punishment will not follow will probably meet with the approval of most people who desire that the law should lose nothing of its dignity and at the same time have nothing of unnecessary horror added. The Lord Chancellor pleads for the retention of the form, saying that the passing of the death sentence will act as a deterrent. James I. juggled with death sentences in this manner and got himself rather badly disliked for it. Over the plot in which Raleigh, Cobham, Grey and others were implicated he had the less puissant ones put to death and very "bloodily handled." Cobham's brother was beheaded "like a gentleman." The Bishop of Chichester, with the blood of the latter still upon him, went then to Lord Cobham. Him the Bishop exhorted to confession. Other prelates were similarly engaged with Sir Walter Raleigh and Lord Grey. Meantime Markham, another of the conspirators, had been placed upon the scaffold and was about to bow his head to the axe when the Sheriff was called away by a Scotch hireling, and the prisoner left to contemplate the axe for an hour. Then he was led away and told to prepare for death at the end of two hours. Grey's turn was next. He prayed half an hour before the block, then raised himself to dle-and was led away, the King sending word that the order of execution had been changed. So forth came Cobham, and having made his last declaration, prepared to take farewell of the world, when the Sheriff stayed the execution, and brought forth Markham and Grey-all three thinking that the other two had been executed. They were told, after having suffered the agony of all but death itself, that their lives would be spared. Raleigh's experience was similar. That was how they used to make death sentences act as a "deterrent" in the good old days. There would be danger for those who tried a repetition to day .-

The Good Reporter is Made, Not Born. No one with or without two academic degrees and no experience could write reports of things good enough for a newspaper to publish. Not even William Shakespeare would know what to get or how to put it without some training at reporting. To be sure he might get better things and put them in immortal English, but his copy would not "get by the desk." For this thing reporting is a business involving considerable specialized knowledge, to be learned by experiments and mistakes, like every other job, and there's considerable toil and moil and drudgery at the bottom, just as there is at the bottom of any other business or pursuit .- From the New Reporter, by Jesse Lynch Williams, in Scribner's.

A story which recalls Thomas Ingoldsby's "Spectre of Tappington" comes from the German town of Tubingen. A certain jeweler of the town complained to the police that his house was burgled nearly every night and that they had better do something about it. A detective was set to watch the shop, and a few nights later be caught the thief, who was the jeweler himself. He was a somnambulist.
