LIFE. Auxious eyes have watched and waited For the buds and flowers to come; Tired of the chilly winter Casting o'er our land its gloom.

Anxious thoughts have hung incessant On my mind with two-fold power, And with fevered brain I've waited For some bright, some happier hour.

Anxious feet have plodded onward, Eager for the prromised rest-Who with me the path have traveled, They its rugged ways know best,

Anxious hands have faithful grappled, With a fee so giant strong, And the contest so unequal, Still may last-how long? how long? Anxious hopes; I've felt them blighted

Like sweet flowers, chilled by frost;

Can they? shall they all be lost? Long I've hoped and watched and waited For the stern decrees of Fate, Yet, the spirit softly whispers,

Some bright charm along the way, To be fully reached to-day.

Toil on, hope on, watch and wait

Or exchange it for a thorn.

Other brows your crown may wear, Drive you almost to despair

Yet despair not! Time will forfeit Every ill-gotten gain, O'er the throne that is another's, God forbids that thou shalt reign.

Then take courage! Heart, to-morrow, You, perhaps may know success; Mark the path of happiness

We deeply regret to say that Edith, daughter of J. W. Vereen, aged, eleven years, was taken siek Saturday night, 5th of March, with a slight chill. At nine o'clock the chill had nearly or quite passed off; and shortly after nine o'clock the little girl complained of being drunk and blind. Dr. Watson was immediately called, but the patient soon became unconscious, as if asleep, and all efforts failed to arouse her. She remained in this condition until three o'clock next day, when the merciless hand of Death claimed her as his

We understand Mr. Vereen has lost four children within the last four years, two daughters and one son, with hemorrhagic fever, and this last is supposed to have died of congestion of the brain and lungs. He has yet two daughters living. Such bereavements as his are uncommon and heart-rending in the extreme. A house filled with such a lovely and interesting family, torn from the mother-roof in such a short time.

"Whom the Gods love, die young." We tender our sympathies to the bereaved parents, hoping they may be spared further pain.

Mr. Frank, son of Sheriff R. G.
