My Pirst Kiss.

The tender smile of parting day Was waning in the west; Soft shadows climbed the eastern way Where morning's feet had prest,

We lingered on, my love and I, Amid the fragrant dew. And though our hearts were beating high comes out." Our words were low and few.

The little stars laughed down in scorn-Where had my courage fled? At last, with strength of passion born, The fateful words were said.

She could not speak she could not see So thick the tear-drops shone, But drooping eyelids told to me What lips were shy to own.

I've tolled and won an honorest name, And now I'm growing old; Use touched the shining hem of Fam-And found its touch was cold: But still from out the shadow past

One memory brings me bliss. For I shall keep while life shall last Our first, betrothal kiss SAMUEL MINTURN PECK.

0.4.4 Points in Petit Larceny.

Solicitor W. St. Julien Jervey was interviewed by a Reporter yesterday as to his circular letter to the trial justices relative to cases of petit larceny. Solicitor Jervey said that aware of the great expenses to the county entailed by the decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the jurisdiction of trial justices, he had addressed a letter to Attorney Genaddressed a letter to Attorney General Earle, of which the following is an extract; "The recent decision of the commission could afford to accept. the Supreme Court declaring the Mr. Cleveland might not be his own an amen-corner it was all over the jurisdiction in cases of petit larceny is fraught with serious consequences control in the commissionership for the joining county."
