Count Szypary was appointed ambassador to Russia last October, but up to the present has spent only three weeks at his jost; his absence being vaguely ancribed to family reasons.

For sometime past there has been considerable tension in the relations between the two complets, the precise reasons for which are difficult to exlain. The whole situation is full of complications. There are religious and racial questions involved primar-ily, the two countries alone. Then, here is the old rivalry for predomi-nance in the Balkans and finally the many differences between Tripple Alliance and the Tripple Entente which exert a most important influence on ralations existing between the individual countries in each of the

. Up to the time of the Austrian annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1908, the relations between the two countries had been quite friendly. They had made a working arrange-ment in the Balkans regarding the conditions in Macedonia, and although t has not accomplished much, every-It has not accomplished much, everything was moving along nicely. But the precipitate move of the late Austrian foreign minister, Count Activatian foreign minister, Count Activatial, in the annexation of Bosnia, upset everything. The Hussian minister, lawoisky felt that he had been duped by the Austrian colleague and he never for the film. Since then Isowolsky has been Austria-Hungary's bitterest enemy, and since he is one of the most influential personages in the Russian National committee he has been able to make things very disagreeable in many respects for the dual monarchy. indeed, there is very good authority for believing that an Austro-Eussian war was very near just before the Balkar war broke out in the fall of be spent or armaments. And just now 1912, It was only through the strong the Russian minister of the navy has personal efforts of the venerable Austrian Emperor, Frances Joseph that such a catastrophe was prevented. It is thought that Emperor Nicholas was just as much opposed to the war, but he, is no politician and by no means strong enough to hold back the firebrands in the Russian National

The personal relations between the two imperial families are of the most cordial charcter. It is sometimes even said that the Hapsburgs are really pro-Russian. The late Archduke Charles Louis, brother of the emperor and father of Archduke Francis Ferdisympathies in that direction are belleved to some extent to have been in-herited by his son.

the patron of the principle Austrian Industrial associations and a very farsighted man, perceived the very im-portant role of commerce and industry, at least twenty years before Eu-ropean statesmen begun to pay any attention to these factors. He knew attention to these factors. He knew viry well that Russia would never be likely to injure Austria a foreign commerce very much, while Germany would some day ruin it. Russia, besides having no enormous home market for supply, had practically no great industries, while German was constantly on the looker for new markets to conquer.

Events have proved the correctness of the Archfuke's views. Twenty years ago Austria-Hungary almost monopolized the trade of the Balkans monopolized the trade of the Balkans and Turkey and Egypt. Today the bulk of the trade of these two countries has gone to the Germans. Indeed, the aggressive methods of German merchants is trying to capture Austria's commerce in the near East, and are bitterly resented by their Austrian rivals.

trian rivals. The sympathies and feelings of the two governments and the two peoples are very different from those prevails all make a great impression upon the ing between the rulers. The so-called National committee in Russic is most viciously anti-At grian and is the commencement season as aning every nerve to get absel.

The fight is mainly a religious one, Russia wanting to bring all the Rathans under the sway of the Orthodox efurch and to force the forman Catholic part of the populaton, as well as the Museimans to acknowledge the supremacy of the Russian church. It is this which explains Russia's heatile authode to King Ferdinand of Bulga-via, who remaized a Reman Catholic, although he permitted his eldest are. Prince Boris, to join the Orthedox church. Russia would never consent complications in the Balkans the re-cent wars have left the situation more complicated than ever. Count Witte, the Russian statesman, recently de-clared that only the first act in the great drama had yet been played. Now is the interval between the acts. How long this will last, nobody knows perhaps a year—perhaps only a few REBELS" AND FEDERALS OF months.

One important result of the Balkan conflicts is the change in the attitude of Roumania towards Austria-Hungary and up until a few months ago Russla was always looked upon as being a fr'ind of Austria. Military strateglats, indeed in considering Austria-Hungary' negotiations strength usually added Loumania's five army corps. But in the negotiations over the treaty of Bucharest, Russia's diplomatists cleverly contrived to place Austria in an unfrigadly position towards Romania

There has been a series the accused have been shown to be in the direct employment of the Russian military attache and contrary to the usual practice in these proceedings, no attempt was made to keep secret the name of the foreign country im-plicated.
