REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR OF SECESSION

Mr. J. B. Hall, of Storeville, Writes of the Battles of Cedar Creek October 13th and 19th, 1864.

With the 20th, regiment, Capt. Cowan's Co. I, I was called on the evening of the 13th to meet the Yankees near Fisher's Hill. About one mile from Strawberry, Va. We lay in the road waiting for orders to go into battle. We got to the top and the Yankees were stationed behind a V shaped rock fence, opened fire on us. They tried to see how many bullets they could shoot at our regiment. They shot down a heap of our boys in a few minutes. That time I had to bat my eyes to keep from getting hit. That evening I saw Capt. Kinard, as fine looking man as I ever saw, sitting by the road waiting for orders with his company to pass up the hill. It was but a few minutes after that that he fell with a bullet in his heart. In the midst of his kinemen and friends a negro, Ham Nance, bore his body from the field and never left it until he returned it to his home in Newberry, S. C. He has a son or two in Newberry that I know. I have met them several times when in Newberry delivering trees. They are as clever men as I have ever met. After the retreat of the enemy across Cedar Creek on the 13th, the brigade returned to Fisher's Hill to encamp in a beautiful grove. Now, we expected a long rest, not so. On the night of the 19th of October, 1864, we received orders to prepare for marching at midnight. No drums were to be beaten, nor noise of any kind made. From this we knew advance was to be made as Gordon's division had orders to march soon after nightfall. The profound secrecy, the absence of all noise from rattling of canteens or tin cups were enjoined upon the men. Kershaw moved out South Carolina in front 3rd, S. C., 8th, S. C., 20th, S. C., 15th, S. C. and 7th, S. C. Two companies were to charge the ford and capture the pickets. A picked body moved cautiously along in front and, when all was readiness, a charge was made and a flash of two guns from the enemies out-post, and all was ours. We were feeling our way along the dark road that led to the ford. One poor fellow who was foremost in the assault on the pickets was carried by us on a litter. Nothing but a low deep groan was heard which told too plainly that battle had been fought. It was cold and we had to keep moving to keep warm while we were waiting for orders. The morning of October 19, 1864, daylight was making little show when we got near the Yankee's breastworks. At the foot of the hill we heard the guns of Gordon's men belching forth to our right. They were in the rear of the breastworks. We moved in double quick to reach the enemy's breastworks. The first one we came to did not shoot at us but the next one on top of the hill opened fire on us and we returned the fire. It did not continue long. Two of our company were shot down and one wounded. Marion Gambrell was killed. John Keaton of Ebenezer neighborhood had a hole shot in the top of his head early in the morning. Some of the boys saw him at sundown and he was not dead but has scratched his brains out of the bullet hole. That was the last seen of him. Silas Pearman of Co. E, was wounded at the same place, I think. We got to the breastworks, there was nobody to fight. We got a few shots at them as they left, men shoeless and hatless were flying like mad to the rear. Their tent and blankets were just as they had left them. Cooking was going on and nobody to finish it. One living sea of men and horses, all fleeing for life, such a panic was never witnessed before by the troops. As I got over the breastworks I picked up a haversack of crackers, bread and meat. I put it on my shoulder with my canteen and a pair of shoes. My old shoes were about gone and I treated myself to a better pair. The Yankees were throwing shells back at us. I ran on in front into the hollow. There I saw a box of liquor and sawdust that our boys had torn up and I helped myself. I put a bottle of wine in my pocket and the liquor in my canteen. When the boys emptied that we went on four miles toward Winchester, driving the Yankees. We lay behind a rock fence until late in the evening. The Yankees were reinforced and our men fell back. Dick Robinson was injured to the same company. We ran some times and walked some and ran shot back at the Yankees. We soon found out we could keep out of the way of them without running. We kept along with the artillery. Dick Robinson wanted water and begged me for a drink. A great crowd of our boys was with us shooting back and Anderson, thus reaching the most prosperous and wealthiest section of this State.

STEVENSON FOR SENATE

Chesterfield Man Considering the Matter

Columbia—Representative W. F. Stevenson, of Chesterfield county, refused to say whether or not he would be in the race for the United States senate next year, but left the impression that his mind was open in the matter. He was in Columbia last week arguing some cases before the supreme court.

Mr. Stevenson, who is one of the best known members of the general assembly and a tower of strength in the ranks of the anti-Blease forces, had no comment to make on politics. He said cotton in his county of Chesterfield was about forty per cent off and that Marlboro county's neighbor, would probably lose about half of the amount of cotton raised last year. He said that the average in Chesterfield county was about the same, and the other crops were about the usual harvest.

Representative Stevenson is a member of the state democratic executive committee and at one time served as speaker of the house of representatives. He was attorney for the Ansel dispensary winding up commission and has long been a leader in the time thought that Mr. Stevenson would politics of the state. It was at one time a formidable applicant for United States district attorney, but he had Friends of Representative Liles, of nothing to say on this matter Orangeburg county, are urging him to enter the race for lieutenant governor next summer. Mr. Liles is a member of the lower house from Orangeburg county and forged quickly to the front as a leader in the body. He stands well up in the front ranks of the anti-administration majority and is expected to take a leading part in the debates during the coming session.

ANDERSON HIGH SCHOOL

Defeated Honea Path Saturday in a Fast Game of Basket Ball

Last Friday afternoon the girls' basket ball team of the Anderson High School went over to Belton, where they met and played the Honea Path team. The teams were evenly matched and the game was hotly contested from the beginning to the end. In the last three minutes of play the Honea Path girls got together and threw three goals, in rapid fire order, but time was up before they could tie the score. The Anderson girls won by the score of 22 to 20.

These two teams always enjoy playing each other. They know that they both play a good game, and as to who wins, it is just a matter of luck. Quite a number of "rooters" followed each team; and they all had a good time, especially the winners.

The visitors from both towns received very courteous treatment from the good people of Belton.

KNOCKERS SILENCED.

J. B. Duke Will Spend His Money Where He is Treated Properly.

Charlotte, Chronicle. The people of the piedmont country can get anything they want out of Mr. Duke. That is a pretty broad statement, but literally it needs but slight modification. He has the money to invest down here and he has the necessary faith in the potentialities of this country. What he asks of the people living here is their moral support. That is all. In answer to an inquiry as to when certain features of the interurban development would be taken up, Mr. Duke told the citizens of Greenville, South Carolina, that "that depends upon you." This is his policy. It has not been changed in the least since the day when his mind first turned to the opportunities presented for investments in the Carolinas.

The interurban is entirely dependent upon moral sympathy and the substantial business support of the Carolinas. If it receives the proper sort of co-operation on the part of the industrial and commercial agencies, there is no estimation as to when this development will reach its zenith. The first essential thing to do to invite more capital from the coffers of the tobacco kind is to show him that we want his railroad here and that we will patronize it. Otherwise his monistic will go to some other part of the country. Mr. Duke has other large interests in this country and abroad. While we do not pretend to know any of the secrets of his business, it is safe to assume that the majority of his other affairs are more profitable than the interurban, that the returns are larger and more immediate. We give him credit, however, for a spark of patriotism in wanting to develop that part of the South from which he came and to assist in the bringing out of the latent forces of this vicinity.

His attitude is that of a capitalist the world over. Men who have money are not going to invest it in sections where the people are antagonistic, no matter what are the prospects of immediate returns. They are not going to lay out their millions upon industries that the people do not want to see developed, and neither how immediately needed. Industries may be. Capital's first demand in any community is public sympathy. This is essential to its first success. Speaking broadly rather than specifically, the interurban factors can have no reasonable criticism to make of the attitude that has been taken in the Carolinas to their enterprise. Barring a few scattered instances, universal favor has followed their efforts. There have been, unfortunately, here and there remnants of a feeling somewhat antagonistic, never has there been the slightest evidence of opposition. The interurban has been given fair treatment. The people subscribed liberally to stock in the enterprise, more liberally in some instances than their better judgment dictated, but they did it because they believed in the efficacy of this system for developing the Carolinas. And taking Mr. Duke's word, if they continue to manifest the spirit of hearty support and friendly cooperation, there is no telling when the present system will reach an end in this immediate territory.
