CLEMENCY SHOWN BY BLEASE TO 1,176

Governor Overshoots Mark of 800 He Set in Pardoning Last Year

Columbia, April 6.—There have been 1,176 convicts who have received clemency at the hands of Governor Cole Blease since he was inaugurated for the first time on January 17, 1911.

With nearly 1,200 to his credit, Governor Blease seems to have beaten the mark he set for himself. At the annual conference of governors in the city of Richmond, Va., in the fall of 1912, Governor Blease in boasting of his pardon record, which was over 400, said that he hoped to make the number 800 by the end of the second term.

There is much speculation being indulged in as to the effect the pardoning record is going to have on the governor's race for the United States senate. He stated that after his reelection in 1912 that he was proud of his record and that he considered that the people had endorsed it by re-electing him over former Chief Justice Ira B. Jones.

Not Worrying Him. In talking with Governor Blease, it does not appear that his pardoning record is worrying him. On the contrary, he believes that the people will thank him for it.

Some folks are wondering whether Senator Smith will lambast Governor Blease on his pardon record as Judge Jones did in 1912. The injection of this matter into the campaign would undoubtedly be like pouring oil on a blazing fire in the opinion of some people.

Easter is Older Than Christianity

EASTER is much older than Christianity. The very name by which we know the day is identical with that of the ancient Saxon goddess of spring, Easter or Eostre.

Christian meaning to the observance of the day, but it has never retained its ancient name. Easter was at one time called the Christian passover, because the Jewish passover occurs about the same date, and the early converts from Judaism celebrated Easter and the passover as one festival.

"The primitive Christians," we are told, "when they met on this day gathered each other with the words, 'Christ is risen, to which answer was made, 'Christ is risen, indeed, and hath appeared unto Simon.'" This custom is still observed in the Greek church.

The pardon board which is composed of D. H. McGill of Greenwood, Sam B. Craig and J. B. Turner of Columbia, have just finished their quarterly meeting and will file their report with Governor Blease.

Of all the Easter customs, that of coloring and making presents of eggs seems the only distinctive one that has found a place in our time and country.

TRUTH THAT EASTER TELLS

If you look into the face of humanity on Easter day and listen to its prayers and watch its movements wherever the message of Easter has been spoken you know that it is joyful and good tidings.

There is reason in this teaching. It is the truth that Easter tells that makes the whole earth glad. What is the reason the grave. To the pagan mind there is no death, and in every man there is a spiritual principle over which death has no power.

Ruffin's Friend An Easter Story

By JEANNETTE B. WALWORTH

TO Ruffin, shivering restlessly from one dirty little bare foot to the other, the fastidious deliberation of the gentleman who was selecting an Easter lily from Mrs. Moser's stock was not only exasperating, it was "formidable." One lily was just like another.

Ruffin stepped back between buyer and seller. He lifted a small, freckled face, made bright by a pair of winning blue eyes. "Mister, I'm looking for a job. I'll carry your lily home for you."

The gentleman looked Ruffin over critically. Mrs. Moser indulged the boy. "Oh, you can trust Ruffin, sir."

"You did not happen to hear the brother's name, mother?" Marschall asked in a queer voice.

"No, nor the name of the man into whose pocket her home passed."

Marschall was in his mother's pew on that Easter Sunday. He listened with a pleasure that verged upon pain to the rich young voice that swelled above the grand organ noise in "Consider the Lilies." The voice was divine. And—her name was Withers.

Marschall's mind traveled swiftly backward to the time when Eugene Withers stood before him, a wild, shaggy-headed boy, almost pleading for help.

Withers had been his roommate and classmate at Harvard—a wild, reckless, unbalanced boy. He got the help he asked for—not in time and again until, with pathetic entreaties, Marschall had mildly suggested some sort of guarantee or security for the large sums.

It was then that the mortgage was given and accepted. A little while longer and Withers had slipped off responsibility with the mortal coil.

that wonderful voice in church that Marschall called on his sister Cernelia. "Well, your progress is your southern friend looking in the matter of payment," he said with a nervous laugh.

"Oh, you would indeed. Lloyd, if you could only say 'The greatest, greatest, most perfect little thing.' Oh, I wish you could say that!"

she is directing it's music this year. They have secured a wonderful soloist, and your sister waits your opinion of the girl's voice. I think Mr. Duvenport, our organist, is trying to interest your sister in this young woman. She is a fine musician and having been thrown on her own resources, has conceived that it is easy to get pupils in New York. At any rate, Miss Withers is teaching in the same house as Mr. Levesque. Cornelia is quite stirred up about her."

Marschall passed his eyes. "It seems," Mrs. Marschall pursued, "that this girl was lost hair and owner of a very fine cotton plantation near Chattanooga with an older brother. The older brother must have been a scamp of the first water. He came on to New York, leaving her living on the plantation, where she had always lived. It appears he went it at a pace. Before three years were over he had got this poor girl to give him power of attorney, and it was only after he had the decency to dispose of himself that she found out he had mortgaged the plantation for more than it was worth, and the mortgage was foreclosed, leaving her penniless."

"You did not happen to hear the brother's name, mother?" Marschall asked in a queer voice.

"No, nor the name of the man into whose pocket her home passed."

"What's that for, Lloyd?" "For you to get a new suit."

"Because you need it, Ruff, and because in a way you have instructed me in getting the cloth, and you know, Miss Gertrude, Ruff and I are to be married next month, Ruff, and I don't want you to disagree her in church."

Curious Easter custom has been observed for many centuries in the western Alps. One hundred eggs are distributed over a large area covered with sand, and the young men and women perform a dance around them.
