FLORIDA GENEROUS TO VETERANS

Pays Out More Money to Sustain Old Soldiers

Then Any Other Southern State and Builds Monuments to Memory—Confederate Reunion May 6, 7, 8, at Jacksonville. Jacksonville, Fla.—The State of Florida pays out more money per capita for the support of dependent ex-Confederate soldiers than any other Southern State. This fact should be sufficient to convince Confederates everywhere that when they and their descendants visit Jacksonville on the occasion of the 74th annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans' Association that they will be in the hands of their friends. The reunion will be held May 6, 7, 8. The handsome total of $600,000 per annum is being paid by the state for support of ex-Confederate pensioners. The average yearly amount paid to each person on the pension list, according to the latest report of the State Board of Pensions, is $122.30, while the average for the whole country is $122.30. Widows of Confederate soldiers draw an average of $10 per annum. Since the report from which these figures are taken was made, the legislature has passed a still more liberal pension law, which will authorize additional payments of approximately $150,000 a year, making the total $750,000 per annum paid to Confederate pensioners by the state. These are 2,633 soldier pensioners on the rolls of the state and 9,227 widows of Confederates, making a total of 4,860. The fund to support this pension roll is raised by a tax of four mills on the assessed property of the taxpayer.

Florida is not only caring for the living but the memory of the dead is also kept green. Throughout the state handsome Confederate monuments have been erected by both public and private means. All told there are twenty, or possibly more, handsome

Confederate monuments in the state, and others are yet to be erected. A home for ex-Confederate veterans is maintained at Jacksonville. Last year the state appropriated $5,000 to the Confederate soldiers' home in this city. Two Confederate monuments have been erected here, and a monument is being dedicated to the women of the Confederacy during the coming reunion. This is the epitome of the word that Florida is doing for the ex-Confederate soldiers, living and dead, in proof that the people of the state will extend a warm and generous welcome to the old soldiers and their friends on the occasion of the Jacksonville reunion. Florida, while situated far South of the great theater of war of 1861-65, felt the shock of the conflict. Jacksonville was occupied four different times by the federalists. The purposes of this occupancy, according to official reports on file in archives of the War Department, were to keep the St. Johns river open from its mouth to the head of navigation and to arm the negroes for service in the United States Army. The small Confederate force in East Florida in 1865 was commanded by Gen. Joseph P. M. Jones. Gen. P. M. Jones issued a proclamation here in which he said: "I have my duty as brigadier general commanding this district to inform the people of the district, and of the State of Florida, that the United States Army has a large force of negroes, under command of white officers, at Jacksonville, under cover of darkness, 14th is attempting to verify the place so as to make it secure against any further attempts of this kind."

It is obvious and need not be mentioned in direct terms. It is sufficient to inform the white body of people with a renewed and sterner purpose of resistance. I therefore call on each of the citizens as can possibly leave their homes to arm and organize themselves into companies, without delay and report to me. Gen. R. Santos (U. S. A.) in a report to the War Department dated March 13, 1865, says: "The object of this expedition was to occupy Jacksonville and make it the base of operations for the raising of negro regiments in this way possession of the State of Florida."
