

Strikers' Tent City, Ludlow, Colo., And View After Fire Swept It

Photos copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.

One of the worst labor disturbances in the history of the country has set the state of Colorado in a turmoil. At Trinidad and other points copper miners rose against the operators because nonunion men were given work, and many lives have been lost. Finally the United States troops were ordered on the scene by President Wilson. Fire swept the union miners' settlement, and it is claimed that the state militia started the flames. The illustration shows the tent city at Ludlow destroyed by the blaze and a view of the desolated section after the conflagration was stopped. Many women and children were succumbed in the fire.
