THE GRAVE OF J. C. CALHOUN

The Great Statesman is Buried in Charleston—The Monument On the Canal Square—A City of Monuments

(By William Banks)

Charleston is not only a city of memories but a city of monuments as well. Old Fort Sumter and Fort Moultrie are monuments to the valor of Carolinians, and the statues of St. Michael's and St. Philip's are the monuments to the valor of those valiant people.

But there are other monuments here, and these seek to hand down to the future generations the names of men who have made the history of the state more glorious. Where there are so many illustrious dead, it is proper to feel of two or three typical monuments here, just to show that in honoring the memory of Wake, Hampton, the people of the state were but conforming to a precedent.

Calhoun's grave is situated in the cemetery of the city of Charleston, and the monument is a simple, but beautiful, structure of granite. It is a monument to the memory of a man who has made the history of the state more glorious.

The monument on Canal square is a simple, but beautiful, structure of granite. It is a monument to the memory of a man who has made the history of the state more glorious.

The inscription on the north face reads: John C. Calhoun, Born March 18, 1782, Died March 31, 1850.

The inscription on the south face is as follows: Directed by the State of South Carolina, 1850.

The other inscription reads as follows: Vice-President Secretary able shows Calhoun in the cabinet chamber while his associates are shown in an attitude of unrepented interest. The plate on the opposite meeting.

The plate on the south side reads: 1782-1850. Truth, Justice and The Constitution BY THE WOMEN

The plate on the north side states that this monument was erected by the women of South Carolina in 1896 to John Caldwell Calhoun in commemoration of his eminent statesmanship during that many years of his public life. It replaces one formerly erected on the same spot, but was quite unsatisfactory.

AN OLD STABLEFIELD. The oldest wharves of the south, And rest and roost in the cannon's mouth.

Dr. Jos. Wilson Most Ardent Advocate Confederate Cause

Who, After This, Will Say That Woodrow Wilson is Not a Real Southern Man—Dr. Wilson Was in Sympathy With Movement to Dissolve from the Northern Church.

(August, Ga. Herald)

It is not the purpose of the writer to reopen any old wounds made in the hearts of the people of this gray country during that awful period in American history when the North was arrayed against the South, when brother fought against brother and father against son in many instances. All of that has been obscured by the tide of time and half a century has elapsed and more since the beginning of the awful carnage. It is a reunited country now and the veterans in gray march side by side with the men who fought under Grant and McClellan.

However, there has been so much said by the "press" about Woodrow Wilson not being a real Southerner that the writer proposes to show that Wilson could hardly have been any more Southern than he is.

Dr. Joseph Wilson, the father of Dr. John A. Wilson, one of the most prominent members of the Presbyterian church in the South, was a real Southerner.

Dr. Wilson was a real Southerner, and he believed that the Democrats can win with him as their leader. He thought that the Republican Party in the end must whom the Democrats can win.

RISE AND FALL OF THE K. K. K.

A Historical Sketch of a Troublesome Thing by One Who Knows

I wish to correct a little error in a previous letter that was a slip of my memory when I said that Dr. J. B. Bell, the son of the late Dr. J. B. Bell, was a very vivid recollection of the fact during those days and know that he was at home and one of the best friends that many of the prisoners had. Dr. Bell means the man who was at the camp and was one of the best friends that many of the prisoners had.

The following is a copy of the resolution passed unanimously by the Augusta session of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States of America during its late session in the city of Philadelphia, June 10th, 1870.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this assembly it is the duty of members and churches under its care to do all in their power to promote and perpetuate the strength, uphold and encourage the federal government in the just exercise of all its functions under our noble constitution.

OUR CONFEDERATE DEAD

In a letter for Barnett, and found Campbell eating his breakfast. They asked where Barnett was and Campbell replied that he was in Arkansas, and had not been at home since he came two months before. The soldiers left Hamp up at the road for some reason and did not know that that Campbell was the man they had been looking for all night and they had him eating his breakfast. Campbell could not sleep very well during the conversation but couldn't make much of it, as he expected to be home very soon. Hamp would have identified him as a glance.

They are acquainted with these memorable days knows that all the troubles were brought about by Gen. Scott leaving our rear, his different locations of the dead, and all who suffered from those who were unyielding to the attention of the white people. Scott should have been held personally responsible for much of the trouble.

Why then we seek the holy ground, To tread these paths with reverent feet. And pause before each humble mound, For lo! there the trophies of tears, Sweet childhood with its angel face, And age with crown of silver hair, Compelled by love's restless power, Have come to solemnize the day. And glorify the grave with flowers.
