Weekly Letter

(By Associated Press.) New York, Aug. 14.—While two weeks have passed since the cotton futures markets were closed, no definite steps have yet been reported toward any immediate resumption of business. Members of the exchange are still hard at work on the problem of closing out all old commitments on the basis of the last official quotation, and efforts are now being made to transfer all the remaining interest here into December, with a view to facilitating liquidation. Otherwise, and with the exception of some small transactions in spot cotton practically no business is reported and while many plans are being discussed for the relief of the situation, no material change in the general position of international trade appears to have occurred during the week. The hope is still expressed in practically all quarters that means will be found of resuming exports to neutral countries, a step which may be open to cotton shippers before the new crop movement reaches its height.

The final contests for the trophy will be played tomorrow and to retain possession of the bowl and the world's championship, McLaughlin must defeat Wilding and R. Norris Williams, II, defeat Brookes in singles, a feat tennis experts here predict most unlikely.

The Australasians' victory was without fault. Although the United States champions carried the challengers into duce sets twice they never could lift their game to a plane where Brookes and Wilding were unable to check their rallies.

Recognizing Bundy as the weaker player of the American pair, the challengers directed their hardest volleys at him. Although he handled the rain of shots in a manner beyond general expectations, he was unable to hold the veterans across the net.

McLaughlin played desperately, covering long stretches of net and court, but the effort told and when the Australasians turned their batteries of smashes and outshots on him late in the match his game broke badly.

The American vainly tried every style of game in an endeavor to stave off defeat. If they played in deep court, the invaders rushed to the net and cut off every return, frequently leaving their opponents flustered in the perplexity as to where the ball would be placed.

The attempt to dislodge the challenging pair from the net by lobbying was a distinct failure. At times Bundy and McLaughlin's team work appeared demoralized and they either interlarded with each other or permitted the ball to pass between them without return.

In the general handling of the ball the victors did by far the cleaner work. While Bundy opened in poor form, he improved in all round play as the match progressed. The contrary was true of McLaughlin. The national champion had many opportunities to win games in the closing set but failed in his shots at critical times.

More reliable information as to the funds available for financing cotton hold off the market and the attitude of banking interests in that connection is expected within the next few days. Local spot people report that domestic mills are holding off for lower offers.
