ON AND OFF THE SCREEN

SCENE FROM "UNDER ROYAL PATRONAGE."

TWO substitutes play important roles in "Under Royal Patronage." A young prince does not want to make a marriage of convenience as he is already in love, and he gets an adventurous American to take his place as royal suitor. The American falls in love with the princess and is about to marry her when the real prince and his bride appear. Then it is learned that the princess has also been romantic and has furnished an American girl as her substitute. There is a double marriage, and the Americans are as happy as the couple of royal birth.

The story of "The Woman Who Dared" centers about a daring and successful effort of an officer's wife to free him from the charge of high treason. The film features a sensational race between an automobile and a passenger train and has many glimpses of circus life.

Arthur Mackley has played the role of a sheriff so often that he is known as "Sheriff" Mackley. That title seems to suit him, and he responds as readily when thus addressed as he does when his name is used.

Jane Wolfe is one of the most popular of the many handsome women who are daily appearing on the screen. Her talents have won for her a high place in the affections of the public.

Remember that famous old drama "Kit, the Arkansas Traveler." The chances are that if you are of the male sex you saw it from the gallery of the local opera house. Remember how you stamped your feet and hissed at the unspeakable villainy of Bond, the gambler, and how you applauded the heroism of Kit, especially when he turned the tables on the scoundrels who attempted to cheat young Temple at cards? Well, "Kit, the Arkansas Traveler" has been produced in motion pictures.

Gerda Holmes has been playing the leads in the George Ade comedies recently. She has proved herself to be a gifted comedienne as well as a dramatic star. The humor which she injects into her part in "The Fable of the Honeymoon That Tried to Come Back" is more than pleasing.

One of the most novel comedies ever witnessed is "A Study in Feet." The whole story is told by the action of the feet, and not until the last scene is one of the players revealed. One can tell their every thought from the expression and actions of their pedal extremities, and these are all to be seen.

Advertising Manager,
 Anderson Intelligencer,
 Anderson, S. C.

Dear Sir:-
 I think it is only right that I tell you of two incidents that have occurred recently by our advertising in your paper. Yesterday a man walked into the office and said that he wanted to look at the Chamblee farm that we were cutting up West of the city. I showed it to him and sold him one of them, before I got back to the office, I asked him where he saw the advertisement and he said in The Intelligencer.
 Recently we had an inquiry from Columbia about a farm and when the man came up we sold him the place. He also said he saw the advertisement in The Intelligencer.
 Yours very truly,
 L. S. HORTON,
 First Vice President.
