An Eventful Dialogue

By RUTH GRAHAM

A party consisting of an elderly gentleman, an elderly lady, a young man, a young woman and a notary were gathered in the drawing room of a chateau in the environs of Paris.

"This takes me back nearly a quarter of a century," said the elderly man, "when I passed through a like ceremony. I was then as big a fool as Francois."

"And I as adult pated as Lucille," said the elderly lady. "Your niece may possibly possess the gift of constancy."

"What has become of De Belleville?" asked the young man. "How should I know? Why should I care?"
