so closely in a great city that the reading public and the friends of Johnny Belchambers have ceased to marvel at his sudden and unexplained disappearance nearly a year ago.

Especially did he shine in the matter of dress. In this he was the despair of imitators. Always correct, exquisitely groomed and possessed of an unlimited wardrobe, he was conceded to be the best dressed man in New York and therefore in America.

of two guides, to reach the monastery of St. Goudras. It stood upon a frozen, wind swept crag, with the snow piled about it in treacherous, drifting masses. They were hospitably received by the brothers, whose duty it was to entertain the infrequent guests.

At 3 o'clock on the afternoon they arrived with good Brother Cristofer in the great, cold hallway of the monastery to watch the monks march past on their way to the refectory. They came slowly, pacing by twos, with their heads bowed, treading noiselessly with sandaled feet upon the rough stone flags.

"What the deuce," said he, wonderingly, "is old Bell doing here? Tommy, it surely can't be he! Never heard of Bell having a turn for the religious. Fact is, I've heard him say things when a four in hand didn't seem to tie up just right that would bring him up for court martial before any church."

Brother Cristofer was appealed for information. By that time the monks had passed into the refectory. He could not tell to which one they referred. Belchambers? Ah, the brothers of St. Goudras abandoned their worldly names when they took the vows. Did the gentlemen wish to speak with one of the brothers? If they would come to the refectory and indicate the one they wished to see, the reverend abbot in authority would, doubtless, permit it.

Eyres and Gilliam went into the dining hall and pointed out to Brother Cristofer the man they had seen. Yes, it was Johnny Belchambers. They saw his face plainly now, as he sat among the dainty brothers, never looking up, eating broth from a coarse, brown bowl.

Permission to speak to one of the brothers was granted to the two travelers by the abbot, and they waited in a reception room for him to come. When he did come, treading softly in his sandals, both Eyres and Gilliam looked at him in perplexity and astonishment. It was Johnny Belchambers, but he had a different look. Upon his smooth shaven face was an expression of ineffable peace, of rapturous attainment, of perfect and complete happiness. His form was proudly erect, his eyes shone with a serene and gracious light. He was as calm and cool as a summer day in the old New York days.

"I had no idea you were in the city," said Eyres, "and I had no idea you were in the city." "I had no idea you were in the city," said Eyres, "and I had no idea you were in the city." "I had no idea you were in the city," said Eyres, "and I had no idea you were in the city."

FOSTERS SHEEP RAISING.

Virginia's New Dog Law Aids Wool and Mutton Growers.

[Prepared by United States Department of Agriculture.]

The state of Virginia at a recent session of its legislature passed a novel dog law, which it is believed will enable that state to raise sheep successfully on a large amount of waste land heretofore idle. This law makes it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine up to $50 for the owner to allow his dogs to run at large in the county.

This waste land, while entirely suitable for sheep raising, was not well adapted to cattle for the reason that winter feed in those districts was too high to make the wintering of beef cattle profitable. All that stood in the way of a profitable sheep industry was dogs, which were kept in large numbers in the shanty settlements.

It does not require much capital to get started with a few sheep. The percentage of increase is large, and they reach maturity at an early age. Meat production must be the foundation of the business, but with the almost certainty that the wool will be high priced there should be added inducement to handle a few of these most profitable farm animals. The black faced Highland ram here shown is a type suited to localities where hardness and vigor are necessary.

bers in the shanty settlements. These dogs, which were rarely fed at home, lived on the young game during the spring and summer and preyed on the sheep whenever they were not watched, and especially in winter.

The old dog license law merely meant that a dog was commonly $2 a year hunger for sheep. The general law permitted a sheep owner whose flock had been ravaged to sue the owner of the dog, but commonly the owner owned nothing but dogs, and the sheep farmer could not recover. Moreover, if the sheep owner shot a stray dog on his premises the owner of the dog could sue the farmer for damages.

The indirect result of this law is to allow any farmer to shoot a lone dog on his property. The owner of the dog, before he can bring suit for damages for the killing of the dog, necessarily must establish proof that the dog was at large and thus subject himself to a fine up to $50.

HOGGING DOWN CORN

Gives Labor of Harvesting and Pigs Make Better Sales.

[Prepared by University of Wisconsin.] Many consider it a childish method to turn swine into small fields of ripened corn and allow them to harvest the crop. However, there are many advantages to be gained by following this system where hogs are being fattened.

Farmers as well as investigators at the agricultural experiment station, University of Wisconsin, have found that, besides saving the labor of harvesting the crop, the pigs are usually more thrifty, make slightly better gains and if properly handled there is little or no waste of feed.

Of course in "hogging down" a field care should be taken in getting the swine accustomed to the small areas of corn to prevent them from over eating at the outset. It is best to start with a few pigs on a small area of corn, and gradually increase the number as they become accustomed to the system of feeding.

The profitable hog. A thirty, thin, lively brood sow with a keen appetite will do better as the breeding per head a year than any many swine growers seem to think a sow should be in condition for the butcher when the pigs for sale are on the world. No instance could be given completely to back on the sow and use ground wheat, rye, etc., for chop, mixed ground feeds and the like as you happen to have them on the farm. For balancing corn, barley and the like, a little clover is better than any other feed.
