Ready, Ky.—"I was not able to do anything for nearly six months," writes Mrs. Laura Bratcher, of this place, "and was down in bed for three months. I cannot tell you how I suffered with my head, and with nervousness and womanly troubles. Our family doctor told my husband he could not do me any good, and he had to give it up. We tried another doctor, but he did not help me. At last, my mother advised me to take Cardui, the woman's tonic. I thought it was no use for I was nearly dead and nothing seemed to do me any good. But I took eleven bottles, and now I am able to do all of my work and my own washing. I think Cardui is the best medicine in the world. My weight has increased, and I look the picture of health." HUNTING A BATTLE FOUND EMPTY CITY

Irvin Cobb Tells How He Became "Guest" of the Kaiser. Equipped With Spavined Horse and Two Bicycles, He and McCutcheon Walked Into German Army.

London.—Irvin S. Cobb, a magazine writer, and John T. McCutcheon, cartoonist, who were arrested during the advance of the German troops through Belgium, are still the "guests" of the German government at Aix-la-Chapelle, according to L. E. Winslow, secretary to Ambassador Gerard, who arrived here from Berlin in charge of 290 English refugees, mostly women and children.

The adventures of Cobb and McCutcheon were related to Winslow by Cobb.

This is Cobb's description: "McCutcheon and I promenade out to Brussels on a sunshiny day to inspect a few parcels of Belgian real estate, comprising the battlefield of Waterloo. Soon we heard firing, so we hurried toward it by a very forced march. The cannonade seemed to elude us playfully, and after walking 12 miles we invested in a horse and wagon. The wagon was all right, but the horse had retired from business several years ago.

"After the horse had fallen down nonchalantly thrice, I had a talk with him. He said that McCutcheon, who had the reins, didn't know enough about driving to drive a nail, and insisted that he would go no further until we got another coachman. We compromised with the noble animal by purchasing two bicycles, which had been left in Flanders by the Spanish invaders a few years before. Through the kindness of a Belgian officer, we also invested in two passes, which he told us were good for any performance in the Belgian theater of war.

"The artillery firing we had been pursuing all this time suddenly turned and pursued us, and a few moments later we found ourselves leading our slightly spavined bicycles into the German army's pleasant midst. Several regiments were assigned to conduct us to the commander-in-chief, who, with splendid courtesy, assured us of Germany's hospitality, provided we did not happen to be shot as spies in the meantime.

"The latter supposition appeared more forcibly to him when he inspected the passes given us by the Belgian officer, for he remarked that our particular variety of pass could be carried only by a Belgian spy. Besides, he pointed out that our bicycles were of a type handed down from father to son among Belgian spies.

"While endeavoring to dispel these illusions somebody stole the aforesaid bicycles. I was so grateful for this kind act that I didn't care what the Germans did to us.

"As McCutcheon, however, kept on making the eagle scream for us so loudly, we ultimately became the Kaiser's guests here in Aix-la-Chapelle without being shot once. I will preserve my American neutrality, and the suit of clothes in which I left Brussels, but I've bought a new shirt."
