POSITIVELY MASTERS CROUP.
 Foley's Honey and Tar Compound cuts the thick choking mucus, and clears away the phlegm. Opens up the air passages and stops the hoarse cough. The gasping, strangling fight for breath gives away to quiet breathing and peaceful sleep. Harold Berg, Mass. Mich., writes: "We give Foley's Honey and Tar to our children for croup and it always acts quickly." No wonder a man in Texas walked 15 miles to the store to get a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. Every user is a friend. For sale by Evans' Pharmacy.

CATHEDRAL THE GERMANS BOMBARDED.

The famous and stately Cathedral of Notre Dame at Reims, considered one of the most beautiful structures of the middle ages, was bombed and set afire by the Germans because, they assert, it was being used by the French for observations.

FIND GERMAN BRAVE

Wounded Britons Tell of Valor of the Kaiser's Men.

Do Not Know What It Is to Be Afraid of Either Rifle Fire or the Bayonet.

By HERBERT COREY,
 Special Correspondent of The Chicago Daily News.

London.—Tommy is getting to know Hans better. Groups of slightly wounded men are being sent back from the shattered British front east of Amiens. Every man has been told by his officers that he must not talk for fourteen days, even of his personal adventures. The impossibly stupid British censor office would have all knowledge of this war kept from the world.

"You can talk about the Dutchmen," I suggested to one chap I met at the Charing Cross station. "That'll do no harm."

He agreed with me. He was a nice, clean cut boy—Private Harry Clark of the Staffordshire regiment—and he was just sweating to talk. A hole through his arm only inconvenienced him. He was smoking a huge pipe.

"They fight well," said he. "They're afraid of nothing. They come on when the dead are lying in heaps before them."

The war office has persistently put out stories that the Germans cannot stand the bayonet, along with a companion piece that the Germans hamstring wounded men.

"The 'ell they can't stand the bayonet," said Private Clark. "They don't know what it is to be a-feared. They keep a-coming on, and just trample all over us."

Clark's regiment was entrenched somewhere on the front at Mons. The British were forced to bear the brunt of the German attack throughout this first great battle. Long before they first came in contact with the foe they had been cheered by the war office statement that the Germans were afraid of the cold steel.

The war office had also said that the Germans are inferior as to field artillery and in rifle practice.

"Their guns was good," said Private Clark. "We used just to get a hole dug for ourselves, and they'd shell us out of it. I didn't think much of their shrapnel. Seemed to me it didn't have much force. But they could sure 't us."

A particular German regiment that practiced upon Clark and his comrades was not composed of sharpshooters, according to the Briton. For an hour they lay in their trenches and fired at each other. On the other hand, other soldiers have asserted the German shooting is quite up to British standard. Then the Germans scrambled out of their trenches and started on a dog trot across the field.

"Looked as though they said to themselves, 'You bally beggars, we'll make you get out of that,'" said Private Clark.

The English lay in their trenches and fired their rifles until they became almost too hot to hold. They were supported by a company of French light artillery.

"You couldn't miss em," said Private Clark. "It was like shooting at a wall, they were that close together. They didn't ardy extend their order at all."

He could see through his binoculars the modern rifle men falling in groups. But the Germans kept right on. The fieldpieces cut holes through their mass, but they did not halt. It is Private Clark's own opinion that no braver men ever charged under fire.

"They wasn't ardy fifty feet away when I slipped some more cartridges in my rifle," said he, "and I emptied 'em all before they got up to me. I know I accounted for some in that mess, sir. You couldn't ardy miss 'em if you tried."

But the Germans kept on coming. Clark could see them falling as they came, but they kept on coming. They were innumerable. They swept down the British force by sheer weight.

"They aren't lanaway with the bayonet like we are," said Clark. "They just dig in like they were pitching hay."

No one will ever make him believe that the German has a distaste for cold steel any more. The Germans went on and over the Britons. Clark found himself where the British line had ended and near a clump of small trees.

"It weren't no good 'angin'," said he, "and so I ran. I thought those trees would myke a nice cover for me."

More than one hundred other English soldiers had been taken with the same thought. The trees were not big enough to hide a cow. But they all got away. What's more, they all had their guns, and as soon as they came to cover they re-formed and looked on until they came to another British unit, which they joined.

REVENGE OF FRENCH MOTHER
 Red Cross Nurse Makes Wounded German's Parent Suffer for a Few Moments.

Paris.—The following remarkable human document is absolutely authentic, but for obvious reasons the real names of the persons concerned are not revealed. It is a letter sent by a French Red Cross nurse to the mother of a wounded German soldier in her care. The letter follows:

"Madame: Your son is seriously wounded. His life depends entirely on the assiduous care of myself, his nurse.

"While at his bedside, I think of my son, who, lying helpless on a battlefield only slightly wounded, was cowardly finished by a revolver bullet by one of your soldiers, perhaps even by your son, now under my care.

"I am not a saint. My revenge is easy. Tonight an extra dose of morphine will bring me justice for the death of my son.

"I am sending you here the last good-by of your son. I. A. "Red Cross Nurse."

"F. S.—Madame, your son is safe. He will be well within two weeks. I have merely wanted to make you live for a minute the long hours of inconsolable mourning which now will be my life."

Hard to Kill Some Men.
 Reports indicate it sometimes takes a lot to kill a modern soldier. Sergeant Fougere of France received eight bullet wounds, a broken arm and other injuries, and although shot in the calf, thigh and ankle, escaped being captured by Germans, and limped ten miles to his regiment. Another French soldier received six bullet and three bayonet wounds, and is recovering. The French war office estimates only two men are killed out of every hundred hit. The penetration is so close one soldier did not know he had been hit for three hours, and another bullet went through two soldiers and lodged in a cavalryman's saddle.

KRESS'
 5-10 AND 25 CENT STORE
 THE STORE OF TODAY

To throw the spot light on any average business street of our country, will reveal many average stores. The store of today, however, will always stand alone, even though it be in the group.

This is as it should be, for modern methods of retailing require that a store be something more than a trading place, and the modern demand of the 5 and 10c business requires that a Kress store be something more than just a 5, 10 and 25c store.

This is just what the Kress store means to any community. A department store in miniature, with a price limit of 25c gives a definite picture of Kress' Anderson store.

"WATCH KRESS' WINDOWS"

Church Advertising.

The old custom of publishing free church notices in the newspapers once a week, on Saturdays, has pretty well died out because times have changed and churches have found a better way, viz., they pay for their advertising and in that way get better display when they want it, and just as they want it. The ancient habit still prevails in Syracuse, but some clergymen are getting out of it and are doing effective advertising. The episcopal churches have combined in one attractive advertisement every Saturday. The cost is comparatively small and thousands of people have authoritative information as to the hours of service, etc. The newspapers give publicity to the churches, but the church will be better satisfied when they have space for their official announcements. And persistent advertising always produces results.—Syracuse Journal.

COULD SCARCELY WALK ABOUT

And For Three Summers Mrs. Vincent Was Unable to Attend to Any of Her Housework.

Pleasant Hill, N. C.—"I suffered for three summers," writes Mrs. Walter Vincent, of this town, "and the third and last time, was my worst. I had dreadful nervous headaches and prostration, and was scarcely able to walk about. Could not do any of my housework. I also had dreadful pains in my back and sides and when one of those weak, sinking spells would come on me, I would have to give up and lie down, until it wore off. I was certainly in a dreadful state of health, when I finally decided to try Cardui. See woman's picture, and I firmly believe I would have died if I hadn't taken it. After I began taking Cardui, I was greatly helped, and all three bottles relieved me entirely. I fattened up, and grew so much stronger in three months, I felt like another person altogether. Cardui is purely vegetable and gentleness. Its ingredients have a mild, tonic effect, on the womanly constitution. Cardui makes for increased strength, improves the appetite, tones up the nervous system, and helps to make pale, yellow cheeks, fresh and rosy. Cardui has helped more than a million weak women, during the past 50 years. It will surely do for you, what it has done for them. Try Cardui today.
