

ONCE MORE—All eyes should turn towards North Anderson, for Summer with it's heat and dust has come and, North Anderson with it's trees and green fields presents, to say the least, a pleasing prospect.

NOW, OF COURSE, grown people may stand the heat and dust, but it "wilts" the children.

THINK THIS OVER—Are YOU giving YOUR children the best chance for health and happiness?

Where Strawberries Come From

WASHINGTON, May 1.—A recent survey of the production and marketing of strawberries in the United States, made by the department of agriculture, indicates that the eight most important commercial strawberry districts are Central California, Tennessee, Maryland, Delaware, Southern Louisiana, North and South Carolina, Virginia, and the Ozarks. In 1914, 1,905 carloads of strawberries were shipped from Central California. Lesser quantities were shipped from the other districts which are named in the order of their importance. From the Ozarks came 748 carloads last year.

The authors of the survey, which is published in Bulletin 137 of the United States department of agriculture, "Strawberry Supply and Distribution in 1914," points out, however, that the North plays a more important part in the strawberry industry than these figures might indicate. Great quantities of berries are grown in the North in small patches and shipped to market by trolley, express, or in the producer's own wagon. Only a very small portion of northern-grown berries are concentrated into carload lots, the basis for the government survey. In the South, however, on the Pacific coast, where berries are shipped long distances it is economical to arrange to have them sent by carloads.

The bulletin already mentioned contains a list of all shipping stations in the United States where carload shipments originate, together with the number of carloads sent out in 1914. From this list it appears that there was a grand total of 14,653.2 carloads of strawberries shipped commercially in 1914. Of these, 2,312 came from California, the State's closest competitor being Tennessee with a total of 1,571.5.

Another chart in the bulletin shows the duration of the shipping seasons in the various sections. Strawberries begin to leave Central Florida as early as December and the movement continues until the end of March. By the first of March the first strawberries from Southern Texas and Southern California find their way to the market. About the middle of March the Louisiana crop begins to move, continuing about two months or until the middle of May. May is, indeed, the great month for carload shipments. By far, the greatest part of the Tennessee and Virginia crop is shipped at that time, as well as much of the Delaware, Southern Illinois, and Maryland supply. By the end of June Southern California is almost the only area from which carload shipments are being made. The chiefly grown in small quantities in areas close to the great consuming sections.

In connection with this work the department of agriculture is conducting a telegraphic market news service of the daily movement of strawberries to the various large markets during the current season, together with the prices received. Reports of these movements and prices are telegraphed daily to producing areas and consuming centers in order to assist in the profitable distribution of the crop.

WORK OF RED CROSS NURSES EXCITING

American Nurse Tells Interesting Story of Finding and Aiding Her First Patient.

LONDON, May 1.—An American girl who recently volunteered for service with a Red Cross ambulance in Belgium sends the following account of her first case:

"The commandant doctor with whom I was assigned to work had taken me far up toward the front, where a Belgian battery was stationed. While he attended to some trifling injuries, there came the sound of cannonading, and news that the Germans were attacking the very sections where we were working.

"Suddenly, at what seemed the last minute of safety, two Belgian stretcher bearers, without a stretcher, rushed up to me. They said there was a man badly wounded somewhere up the road. I found a stretcher went off with them to look for him.

"We went on and on. It probably wasn't more than 500 yards, but it seemed like a very long way. It seemed impossible to find the house. Then some women came running and pointed out the place. The stretcher bearers hurried off with their stretcher. I followed.

"The man, horribly hurt, with a wound like a red pit below his shoulder blades, was brought and laid on the stretcher. He lay there quietly on his side, in a posture of utter resignation to anguish.

"He was a Belgian peasant, clumsily built; he had a broad, rather ugly face, narrowing suddenly as the fringe of his whiskers became a little straggling beard. But to me he was the most beautiful person I had ever seen. I loved him. He was my first wounded man!

"I tried—I still try—to persuade myself that if I hadn't bullied my two bearers and repulsed an attempt to get my stretcher away for some other patient, he would have been left behind in that little house. We got him out of the yard all right, and on the paved road. Then, to my horror, the bearers dumped him down on the paving stones. They said he was much too heavy. They couldn't possibly carry him unless they rested.

"I didn't think it was exactly the moment for resting, and told them so in several languages. The Germans were likely to come around the turn in the road at any time. You never know!

"But the bearers stood stolidly in the middle of the road and mopped their faces and puffed. The situation began to be as absurd and terrible as a nightmare. So I grabbed on one end of the stretcher and said I would carry it myself. I said I wasn't very strong, and perhaps couldn't do it, but anyhow I would try.

"They picked it up at once then, and started off at a good swinging trot over the rough paving stones, jolting my poor patient horribly. I suggested that they walk on the smooth path at the side. They hailed this suggestion as a most brilliant and original idea.

"As my patient was brought into the village where the battery was stationed, the ambulance had got its wound and was ready to go. But he had to have his wound dressed. He lay there in the middle of the street and I had to watch while the surgeon stuffed his wound with antiseptic gauze. I had always supposed that the dressing of a wound was a cautious and delicate process. But it wasn't. There was no cautious and delicate about it. The surgeon worked rapidly, unmovable, as if he were stuffing an old crate with straw. And it was all over in a moment or two. There seemed something indecent in the haste with which my Belgian was disposed of.

"Then the surgeon remarked casually that my patient's wound didn't amount to much. 'It looks much worse than it really is,' he said. I felt hurt, as if this beloved person had been slighted, also as if there had been some public disparagement of my 'fad.'

DEATH RATE OF INSURED DECREASE

PETROGRAD, May 1.—A remarkable decrease in mortality among insured persons is noted by P. M. Corse, the Russian manager of an American insurance company. Mr. Corse is at a loss to account for this phenomenon, although he attributes it in part to the cessation of the "night life" in the large cities of Russia. According to this ingenious theory, the longevity of the inhabitants has already increased with the return to regular habits. Mr. Corse observes that out of 385,000 insured only 100 have died in the months of December, January and February, while for the corresponding period of the previous year 131 deaths were recorded out of 371,000 policy holders, and this notwithstanding the fact that 250 of the insured are army officers in active service.
