Mrs. Solomon Brown entertained the Wednesday Afternoon Bridge Club last week. Hall we'en decorations and favors were used effectively and added much to the enjoyment of the occasion. The high score prize was won by Mrs. Edgar A. Brown, and Mrs. B. P. Davies cut the consolation. After the games unightful refreshments were served.

Mrs. Lonnie M. Calhoun was hostess to the members of the Duplicate Bridge Club Friday afternoon. Here also the spirit of Hallowe'en was seen in the decorations and favors.

AROUSES THEM. Many New Members.—Heavy Deliveries Reported by All Associations Over Entire Belt.

The tremendous slump in the price of cotton has driven hundreds of cotton growers all over the belt into the ranks of the Cotton Growers' Co-operative association and if maintained a while longer is going to result in a perfect deluge of new members, says statement issued by the South Carolina Cotton Growers' Cooperative association. There has been a steady influx of new contracts for the past month into the various associations, the statement says, and last week there was a very marked increase.

"When a sllump like the present one comes, it serves to arouse a great many of the growers as nothing else can to the fact that they are utterly helpless if they attempt to fight alone," says the statement. "It makes them realize how foolish it is to attempt to fight in any other way but an organized way. It is a pity that it takes price debacle such as this to awaken so many of them."

Deliveries to the South Carolina Cotton Growers' Co-operative continue very far ahead of last season and indications are that the total receipts for this season will far surpass those of last season. The same report comes from the other co-operatives. Some States have already got more cotton than they got all last season.

Discussing further the present price association's the cotton ment says:

"Who is responsible for the tremendous slump in the price of cotton—a slump that has carried it very far below the cost of production?

"Certainly it is not the good, loyal members of the cotton co-operative marketing association-men and women who have delivered every bale of cotton they could possibly control and who have worked in season and out of season for the advancement of the co-operatives' cause. Nobody can blame them, nobody will dare blame them for everybody knows that but for them the price would be far below what it is now and would have been far below what it has been all during the past three years.

"Who, then, is to blame? . Upon whom must the responsibility rest?"

The statement then places the blame upon the farmers who have steadfastly refused to join with their neighbors in the co-operative movement; upon those who, while not growers of cotton, have done everything in their power to keep the growers from joining, and upon those who could have helped but who have

"It took a financial disaster to Randall Lee Birt, et al., 178 acres of bring about the birth of co-operative marketing of cotton," says the statement. "It has often occurred to us that perhaps it would take another financial disaster to put it across. It will be a terrible price for the growers to have to pay and the pity of it is that the innocent will have to suffer too, but co-operative marketing, firmly established, will be well worth the price. And if the present tremendous slump in the price of cotton will serve the purpose of wa'c ming the people of the South to their full duty towards the movement, perhaps it will prove a blessing in disguise."

> The statement declares that cooperative marketing offers the grower the only way out of the present situation and declares that every man and woman in the South ought to join in an effort to sign every grower in the belt.
