Everybody must work but father, but nobody smiles except the coal man these days.

Mrs. Coolidge has started her Christmas shopping. Why not follow the example of the first lady of the land?

If the soft coal workers go on strike all the American people will have left to burn will be their indignation, and that seems to be a little damp under stress.

The latest move to enforce prohibition by checking home wine making may be extended to prevent fermentation of corn in the silo, and then what will happen to our milk supply?

Asked if she felt that the radio was taking the place of the magazines and newspapers an Ohio housewife shook her head and said it couldn't happen. "We can't start fires with radios," she remarked.

The New York World very aptly sums up the nauseous Rhinelander annulment suit when it says that all the family got out of it was "the public degradation of a son, unspeakable torture for all who bear their name, a grand show-off for the lawyers and an absence holiday for the mob." If New York State were as civilized as South Carolina and had a law prohibiting the intermarriage of whites and negroes, all of the above could have been avoided. While no such law should be needed, it serves as a protection to people like young Rhinelander.

Mercantile Leadership Costly.

Before we succeed in completely destroying the American merchant marine, the likelihood is we will have spent more than double the number of millions it would have cost any other nation to build a shipping background for the protection and development of its world trade. If we are to follow the recommendations of H. G. Dalton, the investigator appointed by President Coolidge, then further vast expenditures are certain to result. If we don't, then a continuance of tremendously heavy losses must be faced. Seemingly the possession of a merchant marine is our greatest inability—a condition that surely would have caused amusement in the days when the American flag was foremost on the seas. The expenditure of millions upon millions in Washington, the added expenditures resulting from continuous changes in the Shipping Board from Admiral Benson to Albert Lasker are equalled only in public imagination by the sight of hundreds of great ships being set on fire by the government to get rid of them and curtail even greater loss. The cost of maintenance of the fabled white elephant shrinks to nothing alongside of the cost of America owning ships.

There has been a steady decline in the American Shipping situation since the time Admiral Benson was turned down on his programme to educate the people of country America to the fact that an American merchant marine is nothing more or less than an extension of American railroad service to increase American trade in foreign markets. It is an admitted fact that no programme of the government can succeed unless it has back of it the support of the American people, and that means the support of the country where sixty millions of American people live. Out of those vast masses of our population few persons in the interior have any conception of the shipping problem, but they certainly have been made to appreciate the fact that American ships are a costly proposition.

Ginnings in County Nearly 26,000 Bales

There were 25,982 bales of cotton ginned in Barnwell County prior to November 24, as compared with 19,801 bales to the same date last year, according to a report of the Bureau of the Census, made public last week. In 1924 the production of cotton in this county totaled 21,300 bales, and in 1920, the last big crop, the final yield was about 28,000 bales.
