Dr. Frank Crane Says

* Anniversaries.

The Italo-Hibernian poet, Tommaschelli, has written:

"I think the meanest historian on earth

Is the one who recorded the day of one's birth."

If your life has not been particularly happy or lucky, why should people observe the anniversary of your birthday?

Some people make much of birthdays and some newspapers give a list of the birthdays of prominent men every day but there are two opinions about that.

Young ladies of a certain age get one birthday and stick to it. They are twenty-two for instance, until they reach thirty-five, and then they begin to go back.

A good plan when you begin to be old is to select a certain age and keep it. Why get any older?

As for me I would prefer to celebrate anniversaries other than my birthday.

I would like to recall the first time I fell in love, if I could, or the first view of the sea, or the first revelation of moonlight or starlight.

The first good view of a tree would be also worth remembering, or an orchard in full bloom.

The first good investment I ever made or the first examination successfully passed, or the first time I escaped a merited punishment.

I remember the first day I was converted to Wagner, and the first time that the full appreciation of the old masters in painting dawned on me.

These are epochs in one's existence, divine enlargements, to the house of life and commendable as well as memorable.

The first pay day also adds to one's superiority complex.

If we are going in for celebrating, these might be worthy celebrations. But just to record that you have lived some sixty years—of what good is that?

Life is a pleasant thing perhaps and is good to see the sun and to function otherwise, and one would not willingly give it all up. But not very much of the time are we glad we were ever born. Perhaps we ought to be, but the mulligrubs are too busy with most of us and our life is hardly successful enough for us to celebrate continuously.

It is very complimentary for our friends to say that they are glad we were born and they hope we will live a thousand years, but we sometimes question whether they really mean it. Some of us have reached the declining years. When somebody asks us to have a cocktail or a highball we decline, and if certain forms of food are put before us we must also refuse because the doctor says so.

Our present ailments and limitations are suffering without calling up those of the past. We would never render ourselves public nuisances by continually rehearsing our calamities. Let us forget them. About the best thing we can all do with the past is to forget it and look forward to the future. That may be better, and again it may not be, but at least it has the advantage of being untried, and we are justified in looking forward to it hopefully.

Chicago gangsters are reported to have sought court protection against the activities of police, and some kind judge may yet place a number of them behind the bars where they will be safe.

Start the New Year Right

The Barnwell County Building and Loan Association announces the opening of a new series of stock, which offers investors gilt-edge security. $1 a month per share will return members $100 per share in 80 months. Thus ten shares will be worth $1,000 in the latter part of 1934. We know of no better method whereby systematic saving will bring greater returns.
