Emperor William Cabbage.

THE best, largest, hardiest and most profitable variety of WINTER CABBAGE known in Europe, and imported to this country exclusively by the undersigned, where, with little cultivation, it flourishes astonishingly, attaining an enormous size, and selling in the market at prices most gratifying to the producer. In transplanting, great care should be used to give sufficient space for growth. Solid heads the size of the mouth of a flour barrel, is the average run of this choice variety. One package of the seed sent post paid on receipt of 50 cents, and one 3 cent postage stamp. Three packages to one address $1 00 and two 3 cent stamps. Twelve packages sent on receipt of $3 00.

Read what a well known Garrett Co. Marylander says of the EMPEROR WILLIAM Cabbage:

BLOOMINGTON, GARRET Co., Md., Jan. 22, 1877.

Mr. JAMES CAMPBELL, 66 Fulton St. N. Y. Dear Sir:—I bought some seed from you last spring, and it was good. Your Emperor William Cabbage suits this climate well. On a mountain side the seed you sent me produced Cabbages weighing thirty pounds each.

Very truly yours, JAMES BROWN.

I am Sole Agent in the U. S. for the famous from Maidstone, Kent Co., England, producing the most profuse and finest flavored Onions known and yielding on suitable soils from 800 to 900 bushels per acre, sown in drills. Mr. Henry Colvin, a large market gardener at Syracuse, N. Y., writes, "Your English Onion Seed surprised me by its large yield, and the delicious flavor of the fruit. I could have sold any quantity in this market at good prices. My wife says she will have no other onions for the table in future. Send me as much as you can for the enclosed $5.00."

One package of seed sent on receipt of 50 cents and one 3 cent postage stamp, three packages to one address $1 00 and two 3 cent stamps. Twelve packages sent on receipt of $3 00.

VISITING THE PRESIDENT.

—O—

HOW PEOPLE ARE INTRODUCED AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

—O—

A Subject of Interest to everybody, and more especially to the Army of Office-seekers.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Times.

I went up to the White House to see how the Executive machine is run under its new management.

The old door-keepers and ushers employed by Grant are still there.

They are former soldiers for the most part, to whom Grant was so much attached that he thanked Hayes the other day for not turning them out. The old proverb, "Like master like man," is exemplified in their cases; for they are now all smiles and politeness, whereas under the old regime they were rather surly and disobliging.

In the ante-room, at the top of the stairs, where Brother-in-law Dent presided over the card basket in Grant's first term, sits a tall, sandy-headed Western man, with a big inkstand and a stack of blank cards before him. The carpet and walls of this room are of a sickly green, and seem to have taken their color from the ex-haling hopes of the legion of office-seekers who have occupied it while waiting to get access to the "fountain of honor and preferment."

Every morning this apartment fills up with a miscellaneous crowd, so large that it overflows into the adjoining halls. The scene is worthy the pencil of a great character painter. Nine tenths of the people are evidently office-seekers. These are easily recognized by their anxious look, restless, nervous manner, and the pallor of their countenances. They reminded me somewhat of the gamblers at Baden-Baden, who sit around the green tables and silently watch the turning of the cards, but they embrace a much wider range of social position. These eager applicants for places are of all ranks, from the ex-senator in black broadcloth seeking to conceal the humiliation which he evidently feels under the haughty air with which he used to stalk about the Capitol, down to awkward countrymen after village postoffices, dowdy widows in rusty black, and weak-faced young men longing for department clerkships—yes, even lower, for in the throng are fellows so shabby and forlorn that they would probably be glad to get a pair of the President's old boots.

The tall man with the sandy beard is little better than a snare for the unwary. Few of the cards which he so politely asks the hopeful callers to write ever reach the eyes of his Excellency. The truth is, this patient and considerate master of the ante-chamber is a breakerwater to keep the crowd away from his chief, while they think he is put there to help them to the wished for interviews. Across the hall, guarding a door, stands a dapper little fellow of unmixed Ethiopian descent. In his keeping are entrusted such cards as come from persons who appear to have any business that the President might reasonably be called upon to give ear to. He takes them in and delivers them to Mr. Rogers, the private secretary.

Mr. Rogers is the second breakerwater. He told me that his orders were to keep all office-seekers away from the President, and that if any slipped past him it was by strategy. "Gen. Hayes and I were schoolboys together," said he, chatting with me during a short lull in the pressure of callers, "and we were law partners in Cincinnati. He wanted me to come on and help him in carrying out his ideas of civil service reform, and I felt that I ought to make a sacrifice to do so. I had no idea that my duties would be so arduous. The President hopes that in the course of four years he can educate the country so that we shall no longer be a nation of office-seekers. He is determined to make no removals, except for good cause, and to appoint the best men he can find, whether the politicians like them or not."

Occupying a desk at Mr. Rogers' elbow is usually to be seen Webb Hayes, the President's oldest son, a smooth-faced young man, with a large nose, who wears glasses and looks like a divinity student. He is intelligent and polite, like all the family. Between him and the President there appears to exist a mutual confidence and affection too rarely found between father and son. A third desk in the room is used by a hard-working clerk, who attends to the correspondence under the private secretary's direction. On one side of this room, which by the way is handsomely furnished and has a lovely outlook on the lawn and the Potomac, is a smaller apartment, where other clerks are on duty. On the other side three or four steps lead from an open door down to the President's reception room, a large square room, with heavy green rop curtains, hung over lace, at the two windows, a bright carpet, two desks, numerous bookcases and an abundance of velvet cushioned chairs. At a large desk, in the middle of the room, the President receives his visitors. All who are members of Congress or Cabinet ministers come directly in from the hall after giving their names to a messenger at the door, and do not, therefore, have to run the gauntlet of the private secretary. Every morning, between ten and twelve, the senators and representatives come in a steady stream. Mr. Hayes has a chair placed facing his, to which he motions each caller by turn, rising to shake hands with him as he advances, and then resuming his own seat. Sometimes, when the conversation is designed to be especially private he gets up and takes his visitor aside into a window alcove, and sometimes, but very rarely, he goes out with him into his retiring room, adjoining.

Carolina Redeemed.

New York, April 10.—The World, in view of the removal of the Federal troops from South Carolina to-day takes occasion to refer to the excellent conduct of the citizens of that State under the most exasperating provocations, and welcomes them back again from their thralldom. It says:

During the canvass of last summer and the exciting contest which followed, South Carolina portrayed conclusively that the welfare of the State, and of all its people, white and black, was safe in the hands of its best citizens, and no where else. Firmness, the devotion to duty, and respect for law, which South Carolina has exhibited under the leadership of Hampton, have convinced her bitterest enemies that she is fit to take charge of her own interests, and that lessons learned by the English speaking races through ages of experience in the management of free government have not been forgotten in the commonwealth of Rutledge and Lowndes. She has so far overcome the animosity of the North, and so far won its respect by her wise and temperate bearing, that something of the old feeling of fellowship will come back to-day, when the news flashes through the country that the Federal military no longer dominate in Columbia, and that South Carolinians have once more assumed the full stature of American citizenship. We bid a hearty welcome home to the State of Marion, Sumter, Pinckney and Laurens.

While the Times would have preferred a compromise to a surrender in the removal of the troops, it goes on to say the President is acting within the limits of his constitutional authority, and with a full sense of his responsibilities. He has decided that there is no proper warrant under the law for the uses to which troops have been put in South Carolina and Louisiana, and with the concurrence of his Cabinet he resolved to withdraw them.

Their withdrawal from Columbia takes place to-day, and their continuance in New Orleans from this moment becomes impossible. Having been content with Wade Hampton's personal guarantees in the case of South Carolina, he is not in a position to enforce stringent terms in Louisiana. Looking at the matter in the light in which he sees it, he has no right to attempt to exact terms. "If the task assigned to the troops is, as he maintains, unconstitutional, he obeyed the dictates of duty when he transferred them to another place, irrespective of the consequences to the rival claimants for official position. We state the position, not exactly as we should be disposed to have it, but as it presents itself to the President, in the sphere of action which belongs peculiarly to himself."

The Black Hillers are rejoicing over the birth of the first girl baby in that wild, Indian-haunted country. The parents ought to call her Siouxan Choyenne.
