GARDENERS

—AND—

AGRICULTURISTS!

—o—

Emperor William Cabbage.

THE best, largest, hardiest and most profitable variety of WINTER CABBAGE known in Europe, and imported to this country exclusively by the undersigned, where, with little cultivation, it flourishes astonishingly, attaining an enormous size, and selling in the market at prices most gratifying to the producer. In transplanting, great care should be used to give sufficient space for growth. Solid heads the size of the mouth of a flour barrel is the average run of this choice variety. One package of the seed sent post paid on receipt of 50 cents, and one 3 cent postage stamp. Three packages to one address $1 00 and two 3 cent stamps. Twelve packages sent on receipt of $3 00.

☞ Read what a well known Garrett Co. Marylander says of the EMPEROR WILLIAM Cabbage:

BLOOMINGTON, GARRET CO., Md., Jan. 22, 1877.

MR. JAMES CAMPBELL, 66 Fulton St. N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I bought some seed from you last spring, and it was good. Your Emperor William Cabbage suits this climate well. On a mountain side the seed you sent me produced Cabbages weighing thirty pounds each.

Very truly yours,
JAMES BROWN.

A MYSTERY OF MATERNITY.

—o—

THE EVIL RESULT OF MIXING BABIES.

Doubts as to which is which--No strawberry mark to assist in identification.

Some time since, a Mrs. Dean of St. Louis, astonished herself, her husband, and the world generally, by giving birth to four children at once, one girl and three boys. One of the latter died; the remaining three are prospering. Mrs. Dean might be supposed to be perfectly happy in the enjoyment of her multitudinous progeny, but for one harassing doubt which continually presents itself to her mind; and which cannot be removed.

The St. Louis Republican says: There is a terrible suspicion that the two boys, Master Thomas Dean and Master James Edward Dean have

GOT MIXED,

And that which of them is the elder and the proper inheritor of a title, were there one in the family, will never again be known! The mystery is, in fact, a double one. Not only is it uncertain that the bouncing baby now called James Edward Dean is he and not young Thomas Dean and vice versa, but it is also a gloomy problem as to whether or not the name of Thomas, originally bestowed on the one supposed to be the elder, should not have been given instead to the one taken at the christening for the younger and baptized as James Edward. The chances for confusion which arise when one nurse has four babies to take care of are almost illimitable, and these chances are only somewhat lessened—not done away with—when the number of babies is reduced to three.

That Catherine Elizabeth Dean is the eldest of the three wonderful babies now living is a fact admitted from the beginning of the trouble and susceptible of no doubt. Wm. Dean was younger than a brother and sister and older than a brother, but William lived to see but little of this sad world where such abominable mistakes are made. The point at issue lies only between Thomas and James Edward. The midwife is quite positive that she has made no blunder and that the one christened Thomas was the elder, but there was a great throng of people in the room soon after the babies arrived in St. Louis and her attention was called away to the mother, and honest though Mrs. Robinson, the midwife, may be, she had no chance to remain absolutely assured. The babies were christened on Monday. Supposing the identity to have remained certain up to that date, the christening in itself could afford no security against future accidents. Subsequent events were calculated to cause endless trouble. A Republican reporter stopping to inquire after their health, chanced to be in the room with the babies when something dreadful happened, a night or two ago. There were ladies in the room, several of them, and they couldn't resist the temptation of taking up tenderly in their arms and caressing for a moment those three little bits of humanity. No lady

APPEARED TO NOTICE

The exact spot on the couch from which she raised the baby she held, and the visitors with the little things in their arms moved about and compared them. The attention of the nurse was called away for a few moments. Suddenly she came back with alarm on her face and a quick question on her lips:

"Who had this one?"

Alas! It could not be said! In that one occurrence the identity of the babies was perhaps lost forever, and who shall say how many times the scene was repeated during the visits of hundreds of ladies subsequently? Neither James Edward Dean nor Thomas Dean can ever to a certainty tell whether he is himself or his brother! It is a depressing reflection.

Some years ago, in Scotland, two intimate neighbors, childless women of middle age, had each a son born on the same night. It was a cold season and, for greater convenience and comfort, a great fire was built in the kitchen of only one of the two houses and there the midwives dressed the newly-born babes. Something distracted their attention and the identity of the infants

WAS LOST.

There was no alternative left but to leave to chance the determination of which was the baby belonging in the house where the fire was and accordingly it was selected in a dark room—in which the babes were laid side and side. The father of one of the infants was a wealthy man with an immense Roman nose; the father of the other was poorer and had a small pug-nose. Time passed, the fathers each died and the boys grew to maturity. As they grew, the boy assigned to the rich man's family showed symptoms of a nose pointing pertly skyward, while the other's face developed a great nose, hooked like an eagle's beak. There was no mistaking the inference. When the Roman-nosed boy reached maturity he brought suit

FOR THE PROPERTY

Left by the rich man and now held by the pug-nosed youth. The legal contest was bitter but brief. The noses were brought into court by their respective owners, and the jury could not hesitate. The young man with the Roman development was reinstated in his undoubted right! It was a Scottish cause celebre.

The law of primogeniture does not prevail in the United States and neither of the Dean babies may have a fortune left them, but then, again, they may. Who knows that the ancestors of the Deans may not have fought shoulder to shoulder with Brian Boru on the bloody field of Clontarf, that from that day noble blood may not have flowed in their veins, that a title and an estate are not yet in some branch of the family and that there may not in the future come from some Dublin attorney an inquiry for Anthony Dean or his oldest male descendant? But when that inquiry for Anthony Dean's oldest male descendant comes who is going to respond and step into the title and estate, James Edward Dean or, Thomas Dean? Professor Tice, himself, cannot answer that question!

Fierce Interview with Ben. Butler.

New York Herald of May 30th.

General Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts, arrived at the Fifth Avenue Hotel on Monday night, and most of yesterday was engaged in the case of the Atlantic and Pacific versus the Western Union Telegraph Company in relation to a patent for duplex telegraphing, claimed by the former company. It was late in the afternoon when, by permission of Mr. T. A. Major, the private secretary of General Butler, of Massachusetts, the reporter of the Herald was permitted to wait a couple of hours in room No. 1 of the Fifth Avenue Hotel to see the General himself. When he did see the General the following remarkable conversation ensued:

Butler (with a roundabout coat, a salmon colored vest, a big black sailor's tie and an insolent swagger in his gait, walking about the room)—Where is this fellow of the press that wants to interview me?

Reporter (Taking the whole proceeding by way of a joke of the General's)—I am that fellow, General, and perhaps you may remember——

Butler—I remember nothing. Damn the whole press. I'll have no interview, and I'll——

Reporter (a little overcome)—I simply wished to ask you, General, if you have heard of the new party that report has been——

Butler—Damn the report. There is no new party. I have had enough of reports and of newspaper men, and when you just go away you'll go down and write three columns of an interview with me that never took place, and I'll be damned if I stand it. You are——

Reporter—Spare yourself, General; there is no need for being angry about it. You know——

Butler (getting red in the face and quite boisterous)—I know nothing, and call upon this man here (pointing to a gentleman who was quietly rocking himself in a chair, but taking in the whole situation)—I call upon this man as a witness that I never said anything to you, and if you say——

Reporter—I shall say nothing, sir, beyond what has occurred, but I think——

Butler—"Say no more; leave the room, and that's the end of it," &c., &c., and the reporter left with many blasphemous imprecations in his wake from the statesman of Massachusetts.

Laurens is rejoicing over an empty jail.
