"THE ANSON HARDY CUTTING MACHINES are the best and cheapest low priced machine made, and have a national reputation for utility and durability."—The Electrotyper, Chicago. The Anson Hardy Paper Cutter is by far the best machine which can be obtained for a less price than one hundred dollars. It is of great strength. These machines have always taken the highest stand. It is the only machine to which is applied the Patent Movable Cutting Board. This device has a reputation of itself: by it, the cutting board can be instantly and accurately moved, so that a perfect cut is insured. This is a very important point in the mechanic perfect cut is insured. This is a very important point in the machine, and one that is possessed by no other. It greatly reduces the labor of preparation in working the paper backward and forward. We cannot too strongly recommend the advantages of this patent movable board. It is worth the price of this machine, and purchasers should fully understand how highly it is to be valued."—Geo. P. Rowell.

LOVE BEFORE THE MAST.

A Touching Yarn. A Sailor followed to the Forecastle by his Young Wife--She stows herself away in male dis-guise. A fatal fall from a Yardarm--The Husband commits suicide by jumping into the Sea.

From the San Francisco Mail, Sept. 14.

"That," said the captain, "is an entry that gives the key to the yarn I'll spin you," as a Mail reafternoon after the noonday meal.

"I shipped Bean in Liverpool. He was a tall, good looking young moist. fellow, and did not appear to be much of a seafaring man by his appearance, but he had a couple of good discharges and I took him. men I did not notice him again the second day out. The mate came aft lugging along a little bit of a fellow with short curly hair and a round face, whom he had found stowed away under the fore batch. A lot of the men got around to see what I was going to say about it

"What the blazes made you hide in my ship?" I said. He didn't answer a word, and seemed scared to death. Then Bean stepped out and said :-

"I know that young man, captain; he is an old chum of mine. nia and had no money.'

I swore some at them both and then sent Colton off in charge of the third mate, who soon got him Publishers and Printers the broom pretty well, and took to work on a broom. He handled sort of to polishing up the brass work and seemed so inclined to be industrious that I took him out of the mate's watch and gave him odd jobs about the cabin, lending the steward a hand and so on. He had all night in and better grub than they got in the forecastle, but he used to always slip some of it forward to Bean. Those two were a good deal together on Bean's watch and Colton would sometimes stay up all night with him. Then he got to like going aloft, and used to handle the royals as well as any ordinary seaman on board. One day the mate said to me, "I heard those two men, Bean and Colton, talking together last night, sir, and there was something queer about it. Bean was telling him that his mother and brothers would never forgive him, and the best thing to do when he got to San Francisco would be to write to some friend at home, but not to let his people know where he was. Colton was crying and seemed to feel very bad. Then they saw me and shut up. I think Bean has made that boy Colton run away from school or something of the sort."

I told the mate to make work as light as he could for him, and once, when he brought me up a cup of tea on the poop, I asked him if his friends knew that he had started for California.

"Oh, no," he said, "but I could not get along well at home, and I thought it best to go away."

"You knew Bean well at home, didn't you?" I asked. "Yes, sir," said he, and looked red and confused.

I never saw such a despairing face on a man in my life as that which met me when I opened the cabin door and the hands were summoned for the funeral services. He stood by until the last moment, and when the body slipped off into the sea, and the shot carried it down, down into the blue depths, he watched it until it disappeared. Then he jumped on the topgallant rail, and before any one could grab him he was gone."

"And the letters?" "I hunted through his trunk," said the skipper, "and found a bundle of letters which I am going to enclose to his friends at home. From what I could learn from them it appears that Been (which was an assigned name) was a young fellow of good family but very wild. The girl's people were also well off and reputable. She knew him from a boy and ran away with him, and they were married. He went to sea after that and she went back to school. When he returned they tried to make it up with the old folks, but they would not have it. So the young fools, without a sixpence to bloss themselves with, come on board my ship. Sounds like a novel, but it is all just as I told you, and here are the proofs." "Have you any objection to my giving the name of the ship?" said the reporter. "Well," said the skipper, "I don't like that sort of sensation, and the owners don't want these sort of things about the ship in the papers. Here is the boat along side," said the captain, and the reporter took a seat in the stern sheets and was soon at the landing.
