HOW TO SIT A HORSE.

The Principles of Horsemanship--Conditions of a Good Seat.
Colonel Waring in Scribner's Magazine.

It is a recognized principle that "a horseman grows from his seat." By seat is meant the manner in which the weight of his person receives the impulse of the horse's movement. At every step the impulse changes, and at every change, unless the seat is a good one, the weight is jostled and the smooth action of the horse is disturbed. If it is good, it is so adjusted as to receive the changing action with a yielding resistance to the shock, and to give no undue check to the motive power. While there must be a certain ease of displacement there must also be an ability to hold firm to the saddle, and, after leaving it, to return smoothly to it. The real points of attachment should be only from the knee upward—by the inner flat of the thigh. Ease of motion depends on the freedom of the lower leg and the ready flexibility of the loins. From the knee to the hip we need firmness and solidity; from the knee downward and from the hip upward the freest pliancy. No movement of the horse should be so sudden, and no lift in leaping should be so great, that the thighs may not securely retain their position, and the body and calves their flexibility. Rigidity of the body implies the transmission of force to the long end of the lever, which is the father of the fall, while rigidity of the lower legs carries an uncontrolled impulse to the other end of the lever and disturbs the horse. The absolute point of contact—the point which never yields its grip—is at the knees only. In the leap, and to a less degree in the gallop, these are the constant points of communication, and however much the seat may be raised in a strong leap these regulate its safe and correct return.

Pliancy of the hips and freedom of the calves are the first objects to be sought, and it is these which it is the most difficult for the mature beginner to acquire. Much help may be gained from a sort of calisthenic exercise of the body, swaying from front to rear and from side to side, and moving the arms in all directions, retaining meanwhile a firm seat without the action of the calves or the heels. There should be cultivated, too, the ability to reach the toe far forward on the horse's shoulder, and to raise the heel high against his side without materially changing the position of the knee. In short, the man should learn the new art of moving his head, arms, body and lower legs from his new point of attachment at the thighs and seat, with the same instinctive ease and certainty with which he has learned to move his whole person when resting on his feet. In proportion as this suppleness has become complete and instinctive, in that proportion does the man remove himself from the condition of a suit of clothes stuffed with sand, which would topple over with the least movement of the horse.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican says that "it would have been a public misfortune to have the Cameron Republican party of Pennsylvania carry the State, or the Corliss Republican party of New York carry that State." It thinks that the Republicans who hold the balance of power in the New York Legislature "will place themselves by the side of Mr. Hayes, and require the coming senator to meet them at the same tryst."

A provincial contemporary says there are hundreds of people who had become religious when danger is near, and adds: "We knew of a man who fell from a bridge across a certain river, and just as he found he must go, and no help for it, he bawled out at the top of his voice, 'Lord have mercy on me, and be quick, too!'"

A Tennessee girl, riding on the cars, crossed the aisle, kicked a young man up against the window, and remarked, "I was brung up never to allow a yaller-eyed man to wink at me."

The young man's mind now turns toward hops, and they go to his head or heels, as he takes them in beer or ball rooms.

People in Richmond, Va., complain that they can't sleep at nights on account of the tinkle of the bar-room bell-punch all over town.

DEATH IN A BATTEAU.

From the Charleston News and Courier.

A heartrending tragedy was enacted on our harbor on Saturday night. On Saturday morning Mr. Wm. Young, a worthy citizen, who for many years was employed in the grocery establishment of Kinck, Wickenburg & Co., procured the use of a small batteau, and with his young son, a lad of about fifteen years of age, went out into the harbor for a day's fishing sport. The tide and wind being unfavorable for fishing in deep water, Mr. Young steered the little craft towards James Island Cut, where anchor was dropped. Towards evening the wind refreshed, and the tide being on the flood, all efforts to reach the city proved unavailing. The cold was very severe, and although suffering much from the exposure, Mr. Young and his son were compelled to drop anchor, and wait for assistance. But none came. The shades of evening came on, and still no relief came. With night the cold increased, and the father, seeing no chance of getting home, told his son that they would be compelled to stay in the boat all night, if, as he expressed it, "we do not die before morning." About 8 o'clock the son says his father said he was sleepy, and laid his head in his lap. For many long and weary hours the youth bore the cold and wind and held his sleeping father's head upon his knee. Finally he could bear the weight no longer, and removed his father's head to the seat, supposing that he was still sleeping. Morning dawned upon the lone watcher still at his post, stiff and almost unconscious from hunger and cold. All day long the boy looked in vain for relief, and wondered much that his father should be sleeping so long. He little knew that his father's soul had fled many hours before, and that he was keeping watch over the dead. About five o'clock yesterday afternoon Mr. Robert Bea and several colored boat hands were coming from the Island to the city, and his attention was attracted by the cries and gesticulations of a boy in a small boat in James Island Cut. They went immediately to the rescue, and there found the dead body of Mr. Young stretched across the seats and the boy in a sitting posture so stiff from the cold that he could not move. The negroes at first from superstitious fears refused to touch the body, but wanted to take the boy away and leave the body in the boat. But the son, still fondly believing that his father slept, refused to go without him, saying, "No, if you leave my father here to die I will stay and die too." The fears of the negroes were finally overcome, and the boy and the body were brought to the city and landed at Moreland's wharf. The family were immediately notified, and Mr. Young's brother went down to the wharf, and after the coroner had inspected the body he conveyed the son and the deceased to the family residence, in King street. Dr. Joseph Yates made an autopsical examination of the body, and found that death had resulted from congestion of the brain superinduced by cold and exposure. It appears from the testimony of the family that the deceased had been subject to an affection of the head for some time past, and it is surmised that being overcome with fatigue and cold, he died soon after placing his head on his son's knee. It is a singular circumstance that Mr. Young should have remained anchored out in the river all night when he was within a few hundred yards of the shore where he could have obtained food and shelter. The almost unconscious state of the boy when rescued renders a more complete account at this time impossible. The deceased was just fifty years of age, and no leaves a wife and five children.

The labor greenback ticket, in Pennsylvania, was supported by twelve per cent. of the whole number of votes polled there. Luzerne county was completely captured by the new party, and the Pittsburgh Leader says that "the moral effect of the victory will doubtless give it ascendancy in future elections over the whole coal district."

"What's honor?" asks Falstaff. That's easy. Any woman who sits behind another in church can tell what's on her in two minutes.—Commercial Advertiser.

Why are some women very much like tea-kettles? Because they sing away pleasantly, and then all at once boil over.
