The Detroit Free Press comes to our office; and we have a serious fault to find with it. It is always so chock full, up-to-the-brim-and-running-over with good things that some exchange fiend almost invariably purloins it before we can lay hands on it. The Free Press is the prince of family papers, and every one who loves a laugh, and relishes humor should subscribe to it. Subscription two dollars a year, in advance.

We received, last week, a letter from "C. M. L." asking us to put in a column of charades, enigmas, and puzzles for the benefit of our young readers. This letter and the accompanying enigma were mislaid in some way, and we have been unable to publish them—a circumstance we greatly regret. In answer to the request, we would say that we contemplate a number of improvements on THE NEWS and HERALD, but are unable to make them at present. We hope ere long to present a paper that will please old and young. If we enjoyed the patronage that should be given by the people of the county to a home paper, we could add many new features of interest. We shall bear our fair young correspondent's proposition in mind.

Our correspondent from Woodward's writes: "Thomas Aiken, an industrious, hard working colored man, living near this place, met with a sad misfortune on the night of the 8th inst. About 12 o'clock he was awakened by the roaring of fire, and upon running out of his house, he discovered his horse-stable, corn-crib and cotton-house in flames. The fire had already got too much headway to save anything. He lost all of his corn and fodder, and a bale and a half of cotton in the seed; also, the seed out of fourteen bales of cotton, and his wagon. Tom had paid his rent and for his supplies, and was in a fair way for making his next crop with scarcely any assistance. The fire was evidently the work of an incendiary."

NOTICE.

R. J. McCARLEY begs to inform every one indebted to him, that, as he intends selling out, it is imperative that all accounts be paid on or before the first day of January, 1877. After that date those who have not paid will please call at the office of A. M. Mackey, in whose hands all accounts will be placed for collection.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Two Miles Before Breakfast.

In a neighboring city in Georgia, there is a married woman, who, after her third confinement, had ulceration, with all its repulsive symptoms. She tried in vain all the nostrums; her husband carried her to all the famous mineral springs, and other places, to consult eminent obstetricians, to no purpose. After the use of the fifth bottle of Regulator, she has been fully restored to her former health and happiness, and is now the joy of the household—is able to walk two miles before breakfast.
